Memorial of Mississippi Choctaws, praying for an extension of time within which their right to remove to the Choctaw country may be permitted.

The honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, residents of Mississippi and of Indian Territory, most humbly pray that those who shall have been identified by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes may be permitted, at any time prior to the completion of allotments, to file their applications to said Commission for allotments, and that they be not required to conform to any other rules relative to their enrollment or allotment than other citizens of the Choctaw Nation by blood.

Your memorialists respectfully submit that by the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," it was provided by article 41 that Mississippi Choctaws should, within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said Commission, make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country and furnish proof of such settlement within one year after the date of their said identification as Mississippi Choctaws, under penalty of being barred from their rights as Choctaws.

Many of your petitioners do not understand the English language. At the request of the Choctaw Nation, through its delegate, Congress has heretofore provided that no contracts made by Mississippi Choctaws relative to the lands to be allotted them in the Choctaw-Chickasaw Nation should be valid. This cuts off from the Mississippi Choctaws the opportunity of employing attorneys willing to incur the expense of attending to the various requirements imposed by the statutes.

These requirements were inserted in the act of Congress upon the insistence of the delegates and attorneys of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Nation, with a view to depriving your petitioners of their rights, knowing that your petitioners were very misinformed and entirely without means, and that many of them did not understand the English language.

Your memorialists are further required, after having resided upon the lands of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Nation for a period of three years and before the expiration of four years, to furnish proof of the fact of the three years' residence as a further condition of enjoying the right of Choctaw citizenship. Your memorialists humbly pray for an amendment of the present law, as follows, to wit:

"Mississippi Choctaws, identified by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes as full-blood Choctaws, shall have the right, at any time prior to the closing of the allotment office of the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, to make application and have allotted to them and to their children, born of them prior to September 28, 1902, lands the same as other Choctaws by blood, without being required to comply with any other condition than that imposed upon other Choctaws, and any conditions making a distinction against the said Mississippi Choctaws are hereby repealed."

Your memorialists respectfully submit that ingenious conditions have been inserted in the law, at the request of the attorneys of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Nation, by virtue of which many Mississippi Choctaws would be barred. Said attorneys have a contract with the Choctaw Nation by which said attorneys receive a fee from the Choctaw Nation for each applicant for citizenship defeated by said attorneys, as your memorialists are informed and believe; for example, your memorialists were required, within six months after the date of identification, to make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, when it was well known that your memorialists were exceedingly poor; when it was well known that your memorialists, under the Mississippi statutes, could not leave their landlords during the crop season; when under that statute it was a misdemeanor for anyone to invite a Mississippi Choctaw to leave his landlord when under contract with or in debt to his landlord; that such removal could only be accomplished by a compromise with the landlord and the payment of the indebtedness of the Mississippi Choctaw, before he could be allowed to remove; when, by the skillful contrivance of the attorneys of the Choctaw Nation, the Mississippi Choctaws were cut off from financial support by being refused the right to contract with regard to the right of their prospective inheritance in the Choctaw country; that under these artful conditions many of your memorialists were prevented within the six months from making bona fide settlement in the Choctaw country; that these attorneys, having a pecuniary interest as aforesaid, have invoked the courts against your memorialists, as will appear by Exhibit A.

The attorneys for the Choctaw Nation have further ingeniously contrived and invented various other pitfalls for the Mississippi Choctaws who by incompetency or ignorance or poverty may neglect to make due proof of three years' bona fide residence and prior to the termination of a fixed four-year term.

Your memorialists respectfully insist that these conditions are imposed for the artful purpose of making fees for the attorneys of the Choctaw Nation, to the great harm of your memorialists, and without serving any good cause either to the Choctaw Nation or to the United States.

Your memorialists have heretofore set up their rights in the premises to the Congress of the United States by various petitions, as will appear from the following:

Memorials of December, 1896, and January, 1897, and September, 1897.
H. R. Report No. 3080, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.
House bill No. 10372.
Senate Document No. 129, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.
House Document No. 274, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

Public No. 162, approved June 28, 1898, Curtis Act.

Emma Nabors v. Choctaw Nation, Supreme Court United States, October term, 1898, brief of appellants.

House Document No. 425, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

Indian appropriation act, approved May 31, 1900. By this act (Public, No. 131, p. 18) it was provided as follows:

"Provided, That any Mississippi Choctaw, duly identified as such by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, shall have the right, at any time prior to the approval of the final rolls of the Choctaws and Chickasaws by the Secretary of the Interior, to make settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and on proof of the fact of bona fide settlement may be enrolled by the said United States Commission and by the Secretary of the Interior as Choctaws entitled to allotments: Provided further, That all contracts or agreements looking to the sale or incumbrance in any way of the land to be allotted to said Mississippi Choctaws shall be null and void."

These particulars we pray shall be reenacted as above prayed for. Your memorialists call attention to the fact that this last proviso prevented us from receiving proper and necessary pecuniary assistance, and the provisions of the Curtis Act (Public No. 162, sec. 19, p. 8) prohibits us pledging any money which might ultimately be due us per capita, the law saying: "The same shall not be liable to the payment of any previously contracted obligations."

Your memorialists were thus cut off from pecuniary assistance when it was well known to the Choctaws that we were too poor to remove ourselves, and they themselves so memorialized Congress of the United States, and made that representation through the Choctaw general council, declaring that we were too poor to emigrate ourselves into the Choctaw Nation. (P. 3, House Report No. 3080, 54th Cong., 2d sess.)

Your memorialists call attention to the various endeavors to deny them the right conceded to them by Congress. The rights of your memorialists are further set up in House Report No. 2522, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session; House Document No. 490, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and Senate Document No. 319, Fifty seventh Congress, first session, and by the Choctaw-Chickasaw agreement (Public, No. 228), approved July 1, 1902, in sections 41, 42, 43, and 44.

Your memorialists humbly submit that putting the Mississippi Choctaws who have been identified upon the same basis as other Choctaws will serve an important part in disentangling a portion of the complicated conditions brought about in allotting the lands of Indian Territory, and will serve to prevent delay in final settlement.

THE MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS,
By CHARLES F. WINTON, Attorney.
R. L. OWEN, Counsel.

To Tams Bixby, Thomas B. Needles, Clifton R. Breckinridge, and W. E. Stanley, as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes:

You are hereby notified that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations or tribes of Indians will, on the 18th day of January, 1904, at 2 o'clock p. m., or at such time as may be fixed by the court, apply to the Hon. Charles W. Raymond, judge of the United States court for the western district of the Indian Territory, to grant a temporary restraining order against you, as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, as prayed for in the bill in equity, a copy of which is hereto attached and marked "Exhibit A."

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS OR TRIBES OF INDIANS.
By MANSFIELD, MCMURRAY & CORNISH, Attorneys.

In the United States court for the western district of the Indian Territory, sitting at Muscogee. The Choctaw and Chickasaw nations or tribes of Indians, plaintiffs, v. Tams Bixby, Thomas B. Needles, Clifton R. Breckinridge, and W. E. Stanley, as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, defendants. Bill in equity.

The plaintiffs, the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations or tribes of Indians, for cause of action against the defendants state:

That under the laws of the United States and the treaties between said nations and the United States they are the owners of all the lands embraced within the area known as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations; that the individual members of said tribes own said lands in fee simple, the character of their holding being fixed by the following provisions of article 1 of the treaty of 1855 between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations or tribes of Indians:

"And pursuant to an act of Congress approved May 28, 1830, the United States do hereby secure and guarantee the lands embraced within the said limits to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common, so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal undivided interest in the whole: Provided, No part thereof shall ever be sold without the consent of both tribes; and that said lands shall revert to the United States if said Indians and their heirs become extinct or abandon the same."

That under the provisions of the treaty entered into between the United States and said nations or tribes of Indians on April 23, 1898, commonly known as "the Atoka agreement," and the agreement supplementary thereto, entered into on the 21st day of March, 1902, and approved by act of Congress of July 1, 1902, the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes is authorized and empowered, in strict conformity with said treaties, to allot said lands in severalty among the members of said tribes, as therein provided.

That, among other things, said supplementary treaty contains the following provision in regard to Mississippi Choctaws:

"SEC. 41. All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stats., 495), as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may, at any time within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said Commission, make bona fide settlement with the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of such settlement to such Commission within one year after the date of their said identification as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such Commission as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to allotment as herein provided for citizens of the tribes, subject to the special provisions herein provided as to Mississippi Choctaws, and said enrollment shall be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said Commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such applications all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who received a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the said treaty of 1830 who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws, entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said Commission, but this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not a Mississippi Choctaw of the full blood, or who is not the descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw who received a patent to land under said treaty, or who is otherwise barred from the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation. All of said Mississippi Choctaws so enrolled by said Commission shall be upon a separate roll.

"SEC. 42. When any such Mississippi Choctaw shall have in good faith continuously resided upon the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for a period of three years, including his residence thereon before and after such enrollment, he shall upon due proof of such continuous bona fide residence, made in such manner and before such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, receive a patent for his allotment as provided in the Atoka agreement, and he shall hold the lands allotted to him as provided in this agreement for citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

"SEC. 43. Applications for enrollment as Mississippi Choctaws, and applications to have land set apart to them as such, must be made personally before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. Fathers may apply for their minor children; and if the father be dead, the mother may apply; husbands may apply for wives. Applications for orphans, insane persons, and persons of unsound minds may be made by duly appointed guardians or curator, and for aged and infirm persons and prisoners by agents duly authorized thereunto by power of attorney, in the discretion of said Commission.

"SEC. 44. If within four years after such enrollment any such Mississippi Choctaw, or his heirs or representatives if he be dead, fails to make proof of such continuous bona fide residence for the period so prescribed, or up to the time of the death of such Mississippi Choctaw, in case of his death after enrollment, he, and his heirs and representatives if he be dead, shall be deemed to have acquired no interest in the lands set apart to him, and the same shall be sold at public auction for cause, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, and distributed per capita with other funds of the tribes. Such lands shall not be sold for less than their appraised value. Upon payment of the full purchase price patent shall issue to the purchaser."

That the defendants, as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, have no power and authority to receive proof of the settlement of any person identified as a Mississippi Choctaw, entitled to allotment as provided in said treaty, after the expiration of six months from the identification of said person as a Mississippi Choctaw, entitled to benefits under the provisions of said supplementary agreement, nor has the Commission any power, after proof of such settlement, to enroll such person and allot to him a share of the lands of said tribes, as prescribed in said agreement.

The plaintiffs further state that on the 14th day of February, 1903, the defendants, as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, identified, under the provisions of said agreement, all the persons so applying for identification as Mississippi Choctaws in the case of King Brandy et al. pending before said Commission, viz, King Brandy, Joe Baptieste, William Cole, Mary Baptieste, and her two minor children, Sam and Louisa Baptieste, and Celestine Brandy.

That the six months within which said persons so identified as Mississippi Choctaws could under the provisions of said treaty made bona fide settlement within the Choctaw and Chickasaw country expired on the 14th day of August, 1903, and that up to and including that date none of said persons removed to and made bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country.

That notwithstanding this failure to comply with the law, and notwithstanding said defendants, as the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes have no lawful power and authority to do so, the defendants are threatening, and will unless restrained permit said persons to remove to and make settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country and take possession of the lands belonging to these plaintiffs, to the exclusion of bona fide members of said tribes, and are threatening, and unless restrained will permit said parties to make proof of such settlement to said Commission, and will unless restrained enroll said persons as Mississippi Choctaws, and make to them an allotment of lands as provided in said supplementary agreement.

That the plaintiffs, the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations will thus be deprived of their common property of the approximate value of $40,000, to the great damage of these plaintiffs, and in violation of their legal and treaty rights.

Plaintiffs further state that said threatened action by the defendants is unlawful, to the great damage of plaintiffs, and constitutes an injury to them for which they have no adequate legal remedy.

Wherefore, the premises considered, the plaintiffs pray that the defendants be enjoined from taking such threatened action, and that upon final hearing that a decree be entered perpetually enjoining them from taking such action in regard to all of such persons or in regard to any persons similarly situated.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed from stereotype plates and bound in cloth 2,000 copies of a history of the Department of Justice from 1789 to 1904, written by James S. Easby-Smith, including biographies of all the Attorneys-General and Solicitors-General; and that there also be printed from plates, etched or engraved by Max and Albert Rosenthal, and bound in said history portraits of the Attorneys-General and Solicitors-General, 1,200 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 600 copies for the use of the Senate, and 200 copies for the Department of Justice.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 2, after the word "printed," to strike out "from stereotype plates, and bound in cloth, 2,000" and insert "the usual number of;" in line 9, to strike out the word "bound" and insert the word "inserted;" and in line 10, after the words "Solicitors-General," to strike out "1,200 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 600 copies for the use of the Senate, and two" and insert "and that in addition to said usual number there be printed and bound in cloth one;" so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the usual number of copies of a history of the Department of Justice from 1789 to 1904, written by James S. Easby-Smith, including biographies of all the Attorneys-General and Solicitors-General; and that there also be printed from plates etched or engraved by Max and Albert Rosenthal, and inserted in said history, portraits of the Attorneys-General and Solicitors-General; and that in addition to said usual number there be printed and bound in cloth 100 copies for the Department of Justice.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF WATER SUPPLY OF PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game to report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 3036) for the protection of the Bull Run Forest Reserve and the sources of the water supply of the city of Portland, State of Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. As that is a local bill and there are reasons why it should be passed into a law as speedily as possible, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game was, in line 13, after the words "President of the United States," to strike out the words "on June 21" and to insert in lieu the word "in:" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, except forest rangers and other persons employed by the United States to protect the forest, and Federal and State officers in the discharge of their duties, and the employees of the water board of the city of Portland, State of Oregon, to enter, for the purpose of grazing stock or for any other purpose whatever, upon any part of the reserve known as the Bull Run Forest Reserve, in the Cascade Mountains, in the State of Oregon, which reserve was established by proclamation of the President of the United States in 1892, as provided by section 24 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and which reserve includes within its area the water supply of the city of Portland, State of Oregon; and any person or persons, save those hereinbefore excepted, who shall engage in grazing stock, or who shall permit stock of any kind to graze within said Bull Run Forest Reserve, or who shall enter upon said forest reserve, or be found therein or in any part thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, in the discretion of the court. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enforce the provisions of this act by all proper means at his command, and to exclude from said forest reserve stock of all kinds and all persons, save as hereinbefore excepted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. I move, in line 9, to strike out the words "or for any other purpose whatever." It seems to me that it is a very stringent sort of a law to say that anyone who enters upon that reserved land at all—who walks on it—is guilty of an offense and may be punishable by a fine of $1,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama? What is the amendment proposed by him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9 strike out the words "or for any other purpose whatever."

Mr. PETTUS. Grazing stock on this land ought to be prohibited, of course.

Mr. MITCHELL. How will the bill read if amended as proposed?

The Secretary read as follows:

And Federal and State officers in the discharge of their duties, and the employees of the water board of the city of Portland, State of Oregon, to enter, for the purpose of grazing stock, upon any part of the reserve known as the Bull Run Forest Reserve.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that this is a purely local measure.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is.

Mr. TELLER. And that it applies simply to a forest reserve in the State of Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. For that reason I am not going to make any objection to the bill. I wish to say, however, that upon any general legislation touching forest reserves I shall want to be heard. I make no objection to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is purely local. It is to protect the water supply of the city of Portland.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. WARREN on the 7th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ during the Fifty-eighth Congress a stenographer, from time to time as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had by the committee or its subcommittees in connection with any matter which may be before the committee, and to have the same printed for its use; that it may sit during the sessions of the Senate, and that any expense in connection with the foregoing shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, etc., That the Isthmian Canal Commission is directed to examine the question of the practicability of constructing and maintaining a railroad structure for the transportation of vessels and their cargoes across the highlands on the route of the Panama Canal, between the sea levels or tide levels on each side of the same, at or near Gatun on the Caribbean side and the Rio Grande on the Pacific side.

And whether such railway structure can be constructed at less cost along the proposed line of the Panama Canal through the Culebra and Emperador heights or on the present route of the Panama Railroad or some other route in that vicinity.

And said Commission is instructed to report to Congress their estimates of the cost of such construction and as to its practicability with all convenient dispatch.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment providing for the condemnation and acquiring by the United States of 1,280 acres of land at Cape Henry, Virginia, owned by the Lynn Haven Beach and Park Company, for the purpose of constructing thereon fortifications and other works of defense, intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXCLUSION OF MATTER FROM THE MAILS.

Mr. HOAR. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads consider and report whether any further legislation be needed to secure, either by providing for an appeal to the courts or otherwise, the rights of persons whose correspondence is excluded from the mails under any discretion now exercised by the authorities of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I ask leave to say a word about the resolution and to call the attention of the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to it.

I have been applied to by very worthy and respectable citizens in my own State who complain that the correspondence of persons who undertake to give medical advice by mail or who have medical preparations for sale—medicines of all sorts—is excluded from the mails, their business destroyed, and the persons who wish to consult them prevented from doing so under the discretion given to the Post-Office Department.

The provision is that "no circular or letter concerning schemes devised and intended to deceive and defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretenses shall be carried in the mail," and that all such letters and packages shall be returned to the writer or destroyed, or otherwise disposed of as the Postmaster-General shall require.

Undoubtedly that is a most healthy, wise, and desirable provision of law and authority of law in general, but it would seem that it authorized the proper official of the Post-Office Department to break up a business where he might think the person engaged in it was deluding the public or was getting money under false pretenses on a very imperfect inquiry, perhaps without the possibility of a full hearing. It appears to me the committee may properly consider whether the public safety may not be insured by providing in the case of a person complaining of the action of the Post-Office Department for some prompt and summary application to the court for a judicial hearing. This resolution does not undertake to determine that question, but merely submits it to the Post-Office Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CENTRAL DISPENSARY AND EMERGENCY HOSPITAL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the board of charities of the District of Columbia is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate the full testimony taken by said board at all hearings or investigations of the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, and also any report or reports that said board may have made on matters connected with the investigation of said hospital.

H. SMITH WOOLLEY.

Mr. CARMACK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all documents and papers that have been filed in the Treasury Department in relation to the appointment of H. Smith Woolley, a former deputy internal-revenue collector of the district of Idaho, whose name is now before the Senate for confirmation as assayer in charge at Boise, Idaho.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the resolution lie over.

Mr. CARMACK. It will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

The bill (H. R. 10516) for the relief of Edward J. Farrell was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. That House joint resolution is a proper measure to be considered, and it is rather imperative. I ask that it be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the army appropriation bill.

Mr. KEAN. I should like very much to ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. PROCTOR. At this stage of the army appropriation bill I do not think I ought to yield to anyone. I have had several applications. I trust that in a very few minutes the Senator will be able to get in his matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yesterday I offered an amendment, which was withdrawn, in regard to the settlement of accounts in the Philippines. That amendment has been submitted to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I will now offer it again, to come in after line 10, on page 50. I will say that if any Senator objects to it I will withdraw the amendment; but the Senators referred to say that it is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 10, insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized, if in his judgment the conclusion be an equitable one, to declare the existing open accounts between the civil government of the Philippine Islands and the Government of the United States to be settled and satisfied and to direct the transfer of the title of the following launches: The Lexington, Leader, Frankfort, San Antonio, Guy Howard, Ogden, Sultana, Troy, Philadelphia, Johnny, Q. M. D., Julia Suerte, and Pittsburg to the Philippine government, and to direct that the same be dropped from the returns of the Quartermaster's Department. The order of the Secretary of War in this behalf, with respect to the accounts of the Ordnance, the Subsistence, the Quartermaster's, and the Signal Corps shall be taken as a balancing and final adjustment and settlement of such accounts. To facilitate such adjustment and to avoid a deficit in the Ordnance and Subsistence departments for the current fiscal year there is hereby appropriated, out of funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: For the Ordnance Department, purchase of arms, ammunition, and equipment, $50,000; for the Subsistence Department, purchase of supplies, $144,680.44; which funds shall be available to replace like ordnance stores and subsistence supplies for not exceeding two years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. My impression is that the object of this amendment is stated in the following extract from the letter of the Secretary of War:

My own impression is, however, that the Commission will think it fair if all the claims for and against the two governments should be declared satisfied and the accounts allowed to stand as if evenly balanced.

If just a balance is declared and the accounts between the two governments closed, he is satisfied, as I understand it. That is the substance.

Mr. LODGE. That is the substance of it, and the purpose of the amendment. It was drafted by the Secretary of War, I understand.

Mr. CARMACK. Now, what is the exact meaning of this latter part of the amendment:

To facilitate such adjustment and to avoid a deficit in the Ordnance and Subsistence Departments for the current fiscal year there is appropriated, etc.

Mr. LODGE. Because in the accounts of the Ordnance and Subsistence Departments those amounts appear as credited to the civil government, with no offset such as the civil government maintains there really is, and it is necessary to make this appropriation in order to cover that deficit. I think it is only a question of bookkeeping, as a matter of fact.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I think. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont a question with reference to——

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Georgia suspend for a moment? I think the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I have a formal amendment that I should like to move. Yesterday I offered an amendment, on page 15, striking out certain words, and did not strike out enough. If the Secretary will turn to the amendment made yesterday, on page 15 of the bill as it now stands, I desire to strike out, after the word "shall," in line 20, the words "when retired, be retired with," and insert simply the word "have." It then will read "shall have the rank and retired pay." The chairman of the committee agrees that that is a proper amendment to carry out the idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 20, at the end of the line, strike out the words "when retired, be retired with" and insert in lieu the word "have;" so that as amended it will read:

Field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general, with creditable records, who served during the civil war, who have heretofore been or may hereafter be retired, shall have the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade.

Mr. ALLISON. May I make a single suggestion to the Senator from Colorado? Does the amendment as now modified increase the retired pay only hereafter? Is the word "hereafter" there?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will look at the RECORD, on page 2991, he will see there just what we did in this matter yesterday. I do not think this changes the amendment of yesterday, except to render it a little clearer and to make it a little better English.

Mr. ALLISON. It now applies to officers who have been retired in the past.

Mr. TELLER. It is the purpose of the provision as it now stands to give those who have been retired under the operations of law one advanced grade, and also when they shall be retired.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand.

Mr. TELLER. We are just applying to the Army the rule we apply to the Navy, and we are applying it to those who were unfortunate enough to be retired a year ago and those who will be retired a year hence.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that. It only applies to the future as respects the increased pay they shall receive, and does not in any way constitute a claim?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no. I understand what the Senator means. It does not create a claim for back pay.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I want to understand.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, not at all. There is no proposition of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. That ought to be made clear, I think.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think in the amendment, after "shall have," the word "hereafter" should be inserted.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; put in the word "hereafter."

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado modifies his amendment. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "when retired, be retired with," and insert "have hereafter."

Mr. TELLER. "Shall hereafter have" would be the better way.

Mr. PROCTOR. "Shall hereafter have."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont. I notice that on page 2 of the bill there is an appropriation for the Army War College. The question I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont is whether or not any part of the $15,000 there appropriated can be used for the expenses of the erection of the statue of Frederick the Great in the War College grounds. If the Senator desires it, I will state my reasons for making the inquiry before he replies.

There has been sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury an estimate of the cost of the erection of that statue, and in that way the matter is officially brought to the attention of Congress that it is proposed to erect a statue of Frederick the Great in the grounds of the War College. I am not sure, although the language is "absolutely necessary expenses," whether that would be considered as one of the absolute necessary expenses, and whether any part of this appropriation of $15,000 would be available for that purpose.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not think that any expense for that purpose would come under this appropriation at all. It is a matter which was not considered. It is not provided for. If such a monument is erected there, it will have to be provided for in some other way.

Mr. BACON. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under some other provision of the bill some portion of that expense may be provided for.

On the second page of the Document of the House of Representatives No. 584, of the present session of Congress, a House document which I hold in my hand, there is a statement by the Chief of Engineers as to this expense and where the money, in part, is to be procured. In order that the Senate may be in possession of all the document informs us of, I will read on the first page a communication from the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, an estimate ($8,000) of appropriation for "Dedication of statue of Frederick the Great," required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

Very respectfully,
WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The Secretary of the Treasury transmits that to the Speaker of the House of Representatives with this note:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 2, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, of the 1st instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation for dedication of statue of Frederick the Great, $8,000.

Respectfully,
L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The estimate is made by General Mackenzie, as Chief of Engineers, and in the course of it he makes the following statement:

These expenses generally stated are cost of preparing foundation, raising and adjusting the statue in place; material and labor for erection of stands; hire of chairs to seat guests; cards of invitation to guests and the hire of carriages for the use of distinguished persons invited to attend the ceremony. The transportation—

Now, here is the point to which I call the attention of the Senator:

The transportation of troops to and from the grounds, it is expected, will be defrayed from the appropriation for the support of the Army.—A. Mackenzie, brigadier-general, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

So there is in this bill the anticipation, at least, of the Chief of Engineers, in making this estimate, that a part of the expenses of this ceremonial will be defrayed out of the money appropriated by this appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that this item of appropriation is exactly what it was a year ago, before the matter he is referring to was under consideration. The amount is the same, and the language of the appropriation is word for word identical with the appropriation of last year.

Mr. BACON. I have noted that fact, but still I was uncertain, as there is no specification as to what would be included under the term "necessary expenses," that it might be within the discretion of some officer to consider that a part of the necessary expenses of the War College grounds, and this is to be put up as one of the features of the War College.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] for a question.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia for information. By what authority is this statue of Frederick the Great to be erected? I ask whether Congress has taken any action or whether it is simply the Executive who has acted?

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, this communication is, so far as I know, the only official communication to Congress upon the subject; and what we know about that we gather from common reports and from what seem to be well-recognized and authentic newspaper statements on the subject, that the statue was not accepted by Congress, but that it was accepted by the President of the United States.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], that the provision of this bill with reference to the War College is an exact copy of the provision in the former appropriation bill for the War College; and the only suggestion which I have to make to the Senator on this subject is one I have already expressed partially, that in each of the bills, while there is a specification of any number of the expenses to which this $15,000 shall be applied, there is a general provision in each, covered by the general term "necessary expenses," and, as I stated before, it is entirely within the range of possibility that some officer who may have a discretion in determining what are necessary expenses, may conclude that the statue of Frederick the Great is intended to be one of the features of the War College grounds and that it is a necessary expense to erect it.

Then, again, I call the attention of the Senator further to the fact that while that might be considered to be entirely improbable, one part of the expense of the erection of that statue is the transportation of troops to and from—possibly to and from the capital. I do not know that. It speaks of the transportation of troops to and from the grounds, and it says that that expense is to be defrayed out of the general provisions of this appropriation bill. So, even if the specific items as to the War College could not be construed to justify the devotion of any portion of this $15,000 to this particular purpose, there is, at least in the mind of General Mackenzie, who has had this estimate made, and that of the Department—that there is at least in his mind a portion of the money appropriated by this bill to be devoted to that ceremonial.

As the matter is up, I desire to say a few words on this subject. It is, perhaps, a very ungracious thing to do; it is certainly a very unpleasant thing to do; but I think, Mr. President, there are some matters of sufficient importance to require a man to perform an unpleasant duty, if he regards it as a duty. I confess that I do not regard this as a slight or immaterial matter.

I desire to say first, Mr. President, that nothing is farther from my desire than to say anything here which should be considered as in any manner an affront to the German Emperor or in any manner disrespectful or offensive to him; nor would I be willing that anything that I should say should be considered in any manner as disrespectful or offensive to the great people over whom he presides as Emperor. There is no greater race than the great German race. There is with them and the great English-speaking people a common origin of race, and the same blood largely courses in the veins of each people; but there are many who are famous in English as well as in German history whose statues I would not be willing to see erected in Washington.

I should be more than glad to see erected in this capital the statues of a great many Germans whose names could be easily selected, men who have illustrated in their lives and achievements those things which have advanced the civilization of the world and have conduced to progress and to humanity. Germany's history is full of the names of such men, those who have glorified Germany and honored all mankind, and if the German Emperor or the German people were to offer to this nation a statue of Goethe or Wagner, or any of many other Germans whose names might be suggested, men who have been famous in literature, philosophy, invention, art, and science, I should be very glad, as a Member of Congress, that Congress should accept it and should erect such a statue as a representative here of the German people in the capital of this nation, and to bear whatever of expense might be required for that purpose. I want to say, further, that so far as the expense of this matter is concerned, it does not weigh the shadow of a feather; that is not the consideration at all.

But, having premised that, I take opportunity to say that I do not believe that it is in accord with the wishes of the people of the United States that the statue of Frederick the Great should be erected within the limits of the capital of the United States. I may be mistaken in that, Mr. President. I do not think I am, however, from the discussion of this matter which has been had in the press of the United States and from the very considerable number of letters which I have received on the subject. If I am mistaken, then I know there are some who deeply regret the situation, and I wish to state in my place that I do most sincerely and deeply regret it.

I want to say another word, in order that I may not be misunderstood. I said that I wished to do nothing that might be considered as disrespectful or in any manner an affront to the German Emperor. Neither do I wish to say anything which shall be disrespectful to the President of the United States. I recognize the fact that the President has been put in a very embarrassing position by the offer of this statue, and I regret that he did not refer the matter to Congress, where the authority to accept and erect a statue in this city properly belongs.

Mr. President, statues are erected for high purposes. They are erected frequently and most often as the testimonial of the gratitude of a nation for distinguished services performed to a nation and to its people—services of great devotion and great personal sacrifice and great accomplishment for the good of the people. Certainly no consideration of that kind can be considered in this case, because all connected therewith is entirely foreign in all particulars to the history of this Government.

There is a still higher motive which prompts the erection of statues, and that is when the person whose effigy is set up constitutes an ideal for the admiration and emulation of the people, that all who look upon it, be they high or low, may be stimulated to similar performances and similar efforts and endeavor.

Sir, I submit, in all respect to all who are connected with this matter, that the erection of a statue of Frederick the Great in the capital grounds of the United States can not be in that view. There is no single thing connected with the history of Frederick the Great which would make him an ideal for the emulation of the people of the United States, except so far as courage and heroism and devotion to his kingdom are concerned, which we all accord him as one of the greatest warriors known to history. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to inquire of the Senator, if he will permit me, why he speaks of locating this statue in the Capitol grounds?

Mr. BACON. I do not mean this Capitol building.

Mr. QUARLES. Is not the distinct proposition to locate the statue on the grounds of the War College?

Mr. BACON. When I speak of the capital grounds, I mean the capital of the nation, not the grounds around this building.

Mr. QUARLES. But is not the proposition to erect this statue on the grounds of the War College?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly, and I have stated that in the very beginning of my remarks; but the War College is a part of the city of Washington.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; it is located at the Washington Barracks.

Mr. BACON. Very well, then, it is a part of the city of Washington; and when I spoke of the capital grounds, I repeat, I did not mean the squares which surround this building. I am using the word which is spelled with an "a"—"t-a-l," not "t-o-l." I am speaking of the capital of the nation.

I repeat, Mr. President, that of course there are qualities which were displayed by Frederick the Great which are to be admired, and which give him high rank in history, but nothing, I respectfully submit, that can possibly appeal to the people of the United States as an ideal to be emulated by the citizens of the United

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yesterday I offered an amendment, which was withdrawn, in regard to the settlement of accounts in the Philippines. That amendment has been submitted to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I will now offer it again, to come in after line 10, on page 50. I will say that if any Senator objects to it I will withdraw the amendment; but the Senators referred to say that it is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 10, insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized, if in his judgment the conclusion be an equitable one, to declare the existing open accounts between the civil government of the Philippine Islands and the Government of the United States to be settled and satisfied and to direct the transfer of the title of the following launches: The Lexington, Leader, Frankfort, San Antonio, Guy Howard, Ogden, Sultana, Troy, Philadelphia, Johnny, Q. M. D., Julia Suerte, and Pittsburg to the Philippine government, and to direct that the same be dropped from the returns of the Quartermaster's Department. The order of the Secretary of War in this behalf, with respect to the accounts of the Ordnance, the Subsistence, the Quartermaster's, and the Signal Corps shall be taken as a balancing and final adjustment and settlement of such accounts. To facilitate such adjustment and to avoid a deficit in the Ordnance and Subsistence departments for the current fiscal year there is hereby appropriated, out of funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: For the Ordnance Department, purchase of arms, ammunition, and equipment, $50,000; for the Subsistence Department, purchase of supplies, $144,680.44; which funds shall be available to replace like ordnance stores and subsistence supplies for not exceeding two years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. My impression is that the object of this amendment is stated in the following extract from the letter of the Secretary of War:

My own impression is, however, that the Commission will think it fair if all the claims for and against the two governments should be declared satisfied and the accounts allowed to stand as if evenly balanced.

If just a balance is declared and the accounts between the two governments closed, he is satisfied, as I understand it. That is the substance.

Mr. LODGE. That is the substance of it, and the purpose of the amendment. It was drafted by the Secretary of War, I understand.

Mr. CARMACK. Now, what is the exact meaning of this latter part of the amendment:

To facilitate such adjustment and to avoid a deficit in the Ordnance and Subsistence Departments for the current fiscal year there is appropriated, etc.

Mr. LODGE. Because in the accounts of the Ordnance and Subsistence Departments those amounts appear as credited to the civil government, with no offset such as the civil government maintains there really is, and it is necessary to make this appropriation in order to cover that deficit. I think it is only a question of bookkeeping, as a matter of fact.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I think. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont a question with reference to——

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Georgia suspend for a moment? I think the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I have a formal amendment that I should like to move. Yesterday I offered an amendment, on page 15, striking out certain words, and did not strike out enough. If the Secretary will turn to the amendment made yesterday, on page 15 of the bill as it now stands, I desire to strike out, after the word "shall," in line 20, the words "when retired, be retired with," and insert simply the word "have." It then will read "shall have the rank and retired pay." The chairman of the committee agrees that that is a proper amendment to carry out the idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 20, at the end of the line, strike out the words "when retired, be retired with" and insert in lieu the word "have;" so that as amended it will read:

Field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general, with creditable records, who served during the civil war, who have heretofore been or may hereafter be retired, shall have the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade.

Mr. ALLISON. May I make a single suggestion to the Senator from Colorado? Does the amendment as now modified increase the retired pay only hereafter? Is the word "hereafter" there?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will look at the RECORD, on page 2991, he will see there just what we did in this matter yesterday. I do not think this changes the amendment of yesterday, except to render it a little clearer and to make it a little better English.

Mr. ALLISON. It now applies to officers who have been retired in the past.

Mr. TELLER. It is the purpose of the provision as it now stands to give those who have been retired under the operations of law one advanced grade, and also when they shall be retired.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand.

Mr. TELLER. We are just applying to the Army the rule we apply to the Navy, and we are applying it to those who were unfortunate enough to be retired a year ago and those who will be retired a year hence.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that. It only applies to the future as respects the increased pay they shall receive, and does not in any way constitute a claim?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no. I understand what the Senator means. It does not create a claim for back pay.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I want to understand.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, not at all. There is no proposition of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. That ought to be made clear, I think.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think in the amendment, after "shall have," the word "hereafter" should be inserted.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; put in the word "hereafter."

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado modifies his amendment. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "when retired, be retired with," and insert "have hereafter."

Mr. TELLER. "Shall hereafter have" would be the better way.

Mr. PROCTOR. "Shall hereafter have."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont. I notice that on page 2 of the bill there is an appropriation for the Army War College. The question I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont is whether or not any part of the $15,000 there appropriated can be used for the expenses of the erection of the statue of Frederick the Great in the War College grounds. If the Senator desires it, I will state my reasons for making the inquiry before he replies.

There has been sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury an estimate of the cost of the erection of that statue, and in that way the matter is officially brought to the attention of Congress that it is proposed to erect a statue of Frederick the Great in the grounds of the War College. I am not sure, although the language is "absolutely necessary expenses," whether that would be considered as one of the absolute necessary expenses, and whether any part of this appropriation of $15,000 would be available for that purpose.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not think that any expense for that purpose would come under this appropriation at all. It is a matter which was not considered. It is not provided for. If such a monument is erected there, it will have to be provided for in some other way.

Mr. BACON. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under some other provision of the bill some portion of that expense may be provided for.

On the second page of the Document of the House of Representatives No. 584, of the present session of Congress, a House document which I hold in my hand, there is a statement by the Chief of Engineers as to this expense and where the money, in part, is to be procured. In order that the Senate may be in possession of all the document informs us of, I will read on the first page a communication from the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, an estimate ($8,000) of appropriation for "Dedication of statue of Frederick the Great," required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

Very respectfully,
WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The Secretary of the Treasury transmits that to the Speaker of the House of Representatives with this note:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 3, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, of the 1st instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation for dedication of statue of Frederick the Great, $8,000.

Respectfully,
L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The estimate is made by General Mackenzie, as Chief of Engineers, and in the course of it he makes the following statement:

These expenses generally stated are cost of preparing foundation, raising and adjusting the statue in place; material and labor for erection of stands; hire of chairs to seat guests; cards of invitation to guests and the hire of carriages for the use of distinguished persons invited to attend the ceremony. The transportation—

Now, here is the point to which I call the attention of the Senator:

The transportation of troops to and from the grounds, it is expected, will be defrayed from the appropriation for the support of the Army.—A. Mackenzie, brigadier-general, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

So there is in this bill the anticipation, at least, of the Chief of Engineers, in making this estimate, that a part of the expenses of this ceremonial will be defrayed out of the money appropriated by this appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that this item of appropriation is exactly what it was a year ago, before the matter he is referring to was under consideration. The amount is the same, and the language of the appropriation is word for word identical with the appropriation of last year.

Mr. BACON. I have noted that fact, but still I was uncertain, as there is no specification as to what would be included under the term "necessary expenses," that it might be within the discretion of some officer to consider that a part of the necessary expenses of the War College grounds, and this is to be put up as one of the features of the War College.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] for a question.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia for information. By what authority is this statue of Frederick the Great to be erected? I ask whether Congress has taken any action or whether it is simply the Executive who has acted?

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, this communication is, so far as I know, the only official communication to Congress upon the subject; and what we know about that we gather from common reports and from what seem to be well-recognized and authentic newspaper statements on the subject, that the statue was not accepted by Congress, but that it was accepted by the President of the United States.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], that the provision of this bill with reference to the War College is an exact copy of the provision in the former appropriation bill for the War College; and the only suggestion which I have to make to the Senator on this subject is one I have already expressed partially, that in each of the bills, while there is a specification of any number of the expenses to which this $15,000 shall be applied, there is a general provision in each, covered by the general term "necessary expenses," and, as I stated before, it is entirely within the range of possibility that some officer who may have a discretion in determining what are necessary expenses, may conclude that the statue of Frederick the Great is intended to be one of the features of the War College grounds and that it is a necessary expense to erect it.

Then, again, I call the attention of the Senator further to the fact that while that might be considered to be entirely improbable, one part of the expense of the erection of that statue is the transportation of troops to and from—possibly to and from the capital. I do not know that. It speaks of the transportation of troops to and from the grounds, and it says that that expense is to be defrayed out of the general provisions of this appropriation bill. So, even if the specific items as to the War College could not be construed to justify the devotion of any portion of this $15,000 to this particular purpose, there is, at least in the mind of General Mackenzie, who has had this estimate made, and that of the Department—that there is at least in his mind a portion of the money appropriated by this bill to be devoted to that ceremonial.

As the matter is up, I desire to say a few words on this subject. It is, perhaps, a very ungracious thing to do; it is certainly a very unpleasant thing to do; but I think, Mr. President, there are some matters of sufficient importance to require a man to perform an unpleasant duty, if he regards it as a duty. I confess that I do not regard this as a slight or immaterial matter.

I desire to say first, Mr. President, that nothing is farther from my desire than to say anything here which should be considered as in any manner an affront to the German Emperor or in any manner disrespectful or offensive to him; nor would I be willing that anything that I should say should be considered in any manner as disrespectful or offensive to the great people over whom he presides as Emperor. There is no greater race than the great German race. There is with them and the great English-speaking people a common origin of race, and the same blood largely courses in the veins of each people; but there are many who are famous in English as well as in German history whose statues I would not be willing to see erected in Washington.

I want to say, further, that so far as the expense of this matter is concerned, it does not weigh the shadow of a feather; that is not the consideration at all.

But, having premised that, I take opportunity to say that I do not believe that it is in accord with the wishes of the people of the United States that the statue of Frederick the Great should be erected within the limits of the capital of the United States. I may be mistaken in that, Mr. President. I do not think I am, however, from the discussion of this matter which has been had in the press of the United States and from the very considerable number of letters which I have received on the subject. If I am mistaken, then I know there are some who deeply regret the situation, and I wish to state in my place that I do most sincerely and deeply regret it.

I want to say another word, in order that I may not be misunderstood. I said that I wished to do nothing that might be considered as disrespectful or in any manner an affront to the German Emperor. Neither do I wish to say anything which shall be disrespectful to the President of the United States. I recognize the fact that the President has been put in a very embarrassing position by the offer of this statue, and I regret that he did not refer the matter to Congress, where the authority to accept and erect a statue in this city properly belongs.

Mr. President, statues are erected for high purposes. They are erected frequently and most often as the testimonial of the gratitude of a nation for distinguished services performed to a nation and to its people—services of great devotion and great personal sacrifice and great accomplishment for the good of the people. Certainly no consideration of that kind can be considered in this case, because all connected therewith is entirely foreign in all particulars to the history of this Government.

There is a still higher motive which prompts the erection of statues, and that is when the person whose effigy is set up constitutes an ideal for the admiration and emulation of the people, that all who look upon it, be they high or low, may be stimulated to similar performances and similar efforts and endeavor.

There is no single thing connected with the history of Frederick the Great which would make him an ideal for the emulation of the people of the United States, except so far as courage and heroism and devotion to his kingdom are concerned, which we all accord him as one of the greatest warriors known to history. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to inquire of the Senator, if he will permit me, why he speaks of locating this statue in the Capitol grounds?

Mr. BACON. I do not mean this Capitol building.

Mr. QUARLES. Is not the distinct proposition to locate the statue on the grounds of the War College?

Mr. BACON. When I speak of the capital grounds, I mean the capital of the nation, not the grounds around this building.

Mr. QUARLES. But is not the proposition to erect this statue on the grounds of the War College?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly, and I have stated that in the very beginning of my remarks; but the War College is a part of the city of Washington.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; it is located at the Washington Barracks.

I repeat, Mr. President, that of course there are qualities which were displayed by Frederick the Great which are to be admired, and which give him high rank in history, but nothing, I respectfully submit, that can possibly appeal to the people of the United States as an ideal to be emulated by the citizens of the United States in the effort to preserve and develop the institutions of this country and to contribute to the great consummation which we all hope for it.

Sir, I shall use no words of disrespect or disparagement to the memory of Frederick the Great, and what I say is not influenced by any partisanship; it is influenced by what I conceive to be the duty of this Government as the great Republic of the earth, as the advocate and promoter and exemplar of free institutions, as the great type of liberal, free government; and I submit that it is not consistent with such a character of government, or with the traditions of this Government, or with the hopes that we have for it in the future that there should be set up within the capital city of the nation the statue of the man who, in whatever degree he may be and is entitled to the appellation of "The Great" as a warrior and an autocrat, was still to as great an extent as any other who has ever lived in modern times the type of absolutism in government.

Mr. President, our people on holidays take their children to walk around to view this beautiful Capitol building and to note the monuments which are found in the parks all over the city; and they point out to them, "There is Washington;" "There is General Greene;" "There is General Hancock;" "There is General Scott;" "There is Franklin;" and "There is Webster;" and the father points out each one to his children as an ideal to be emulated. When one of them comes in front of the statue of Frederick the Great and points it out to his child, and says, "My son, there is the statue of Frederick the Great," what is he to tell him? To what is he to point him as the ideal which he desires that son to emulate as one of the supporters of this Government; to what is he to point him as the feature which he shall emulate considered from the standpoint of personal liberty, the right of the people to self-government, and the preservation of free republican institutions? There are those of German blood whose statues can be pointed to as furnishing ideals to be emulated. We have already in this city the statue of the famous founder of a school of medicine, and Congress has already appropriated money for the erection of a statue in the capital of the renowned Baron von Steuben, who distinguished himself as a soldier during the Revolution in assisting us in achieving our independence. The memories of such Germans I am glad for this Government to honor with statues in our capital.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BACON. For a question.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion as to what a father is to point his child on such an occasion?

Mr. BACON. I do not yield for a speech, Mr. President.

Mr. STEWART. Frederick the Great was a remarkable character——

Mr. BACON. I know I stand in need of the knowledge which the Senator possesses, but I can not yield to him for a speech.

Mr. STEWART. No speech, but I will tell the Senator something.

Mr. BACON. I know I need the Senator's information very much.

Mr. STEWART. You do.

Mr. BACON. But I decline to yield to the Senator. He can give us the information he desires after I get through.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to ask a question. I merely want to make a suggestion for your information.

Mr. BACON. If you will simply make the suggestion without making a speech, I will consent that you make it.

Mr. STEWART. Frederick the Great, in his independence and his warlike record, was a remarkable character.

Mr. BACON. Well——

Mr. STEWART. Does not the Senator wish me to state it?

Mr. BACON. No; not if the Senator desires to go now into a panegytic on Frederick the Great. That would interrupt to too great an extent what I have to say.

Mr. STEWART. I do not. I only want to state the facts.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will have plenty of time to do that after I get through.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. BACON. As I have said, I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. STEWART. I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. BACON. But as to the Senator making a eulogy on the character of Frederick the Great, now is not the time for it. The Senator can take his own time for that purpose.

Mr. President, there is another subject which I think one of importance in connection with this question, and that is as to the authority by which a statue can be erected in the city of Washington or in its parks or streets or public grounds. I have made inquiry of Senators and of others, and I have not been successful in ascertaining that in any instance any statue has ever been erected in the city of Washington upon any of its public grounds except by the authorization of Congress.

As to whether or not the President of the United States has the right to accept a statue in the name of the people of the United States, there may be room for argument, and while not prepared to deny that, I do not concede it, except so far as to say that if there is such an acceptance it ought to be for the purpose of submitting the question to Congress whether or not it shall be accepted; but as to the erection of a statue on the public grounds I can have no hesitation in the opinion that it is a matter exclusively for the determination of Congress.

I base that opinion not only on my judgment of the law, but also upon what, so far as I can ascertain, is the unbroken custom of Congress. Without pretending to get any great number of them, I have here several resolutions which have been adopted by Congress for the authorization of the erection of statues. Here is one when Stilson Hutchins proposed to donate to the United States a colossal statue of Benjamin Franklin. It was a joint resolution, approved July 19, 1888—not a mere concurrent resolution which is not brought to the attention of the President, but a joint resolution which has the effect of law, approved by the President July 19, 1888. It provides:

That authority is given to erect the statue under the supervision and direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon such part of the streets or public spaces in the city of Washington, D. C., as the said Commissioners may designate.

In 1895 the physicians and surgeons of the United States raised a fund for the erection of a statue to the memory of Samuel D. Gross. A joint resolution was thereupon introduced in Congress, the preamble of which provided:

Whereas the physicians and surgeons of the United States of America have raised a fund for the erection of a bronze statue to the memory of Samuel D. Gross, M. D., LL. D., D. C. L., late professor of surgery in the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, whose labors in the cause of his profession as surgeon and as author have caused his name to be respected in the civilized world as one of the benefactors of his race and have added luster to the entire medical profession of the United States.

Upon that presentation and application, Congress passed the joint resolution, which was approved March 2, 1895, providing:

That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the American Surgical Association and the Alumni Association of the Jefferson Medical College to erect said statue in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., as shall be designated by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, etc.

In 1902, in the present Administration, there was a proposition to erect a statue to Benjamin F. Stephenson, the founder of the Grand Army of the Republic, and yet it was thought necessary to come to Congress for the authority; and a resolution was passed, and approved May 3, 1902, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and is hereby, granted the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America to erect a statue to the memory and in honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson, founder of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America, on one of the public reservations of the city of Washington, D. C., other than the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress, to be designated by the Secretary of War, the Joint Committee on the Library, the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic appointed by it for that purpose: Provided, That the statue, with pedestal, shall cost not less than $15,000, and that it shall be presented to the people of the United States by the said Grand Army of the Republic.

As I say, that resolution was approved by the present Executive.

Many Senators now here remember when Mr. Hutchins proposed to donate a statue of Webster. Even then permission had to be obtained from Congress. It would look as if there was ever a man in the world whose statue might be erected in this capital without any distinct and direct permission it would be a statue of the great Senator; and yet it was necessary to come to Congress for the permission.

Senators will remember it. Permission was given to erect a statue of Webster in one of the parks of this city, so restricting it that its location should be under the control of the Joint Committee on the Library, and specifically providing that it should not be upon the Capitol grounds.

As to most of the statues in this city they are made by a direct appropriation by the Government, and they are erected by the Government.

Mr. TELLER. Are they not all erected by the Government?

Mr. BACON. No; I have just spoken of one that was not. The Senator from Colorado asks me if all the statues in the District of Columbia are not erected by the Government. I tell him no, that the statue of Webster, for instance, was presented by a private citizen.

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean that; I mean are they not all erected by authority? I think there is no exception.

Mr. BACON. I was going on to say——

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me until I finish my sentence. I was going on to say that whereas authority and distinct permission were required where a statue was presented by an organization or a private individual, where these public statues were erected, their authorization is the very act by which the erection was directed. Now, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Are not the statues in all those cases the Senator has cited on public grounds in the city and not any of them on military reservations? That is to say, they are on those grounds which are under the direct government of Congress as representing the city government of Washington.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator for a moment doubt that every inch of ground within the District of Columbia is under the control of Congress?

Mr. LODGE. Under the control of Congress, undoubtedly, but not under the control of Congress as the representative of the city of Washington.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I am not talking about Congress being the representative of the city of Washington.

Mr. LODGE. I wish the Senator would produce some case of Congressional authorization for a monument on a military reservation anywhere.

Mr. BACON. Well, I do not know——

Mr. LODGE. I mean that the land of the War College is a military reservation, wholly apart from the government of the city of Washington.

Mr. BACON. But how about the District of Columbia? The authority of Congress is not limited to the city of Washington.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. BACON. It is just as great in one part of the District as it is in another.

Mr. LODGE. Unquestionably; and it is just the same all over the United States. But that is not my point. I mean that all the statues to which the Senator has referred are on city grounds. They are none of them on military reservations.

Mr. BACON. But, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. And city grounds do not stand in the same light as West Point and the War College.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Can the Senator give any instance where Congressional authority has been given to put up a statue at West Point?

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether there have been any erected there or not without Congressional authority. But that is not material to the point I make.

Mr. LODGE. There have been statues erected at West Point—one within a year, I think.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking about this capital here.

Mr. LODGE. But this reservation of the military War College stands legally on the same footing as West Point. It is under the control of the Secretary of War, and not of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; I am speaking of the fact that this city of Washington is the capital of the United States. Congress has the same authority over one part of the territory of the United States as it has over another. But I am not to be diverted to anything else than the question immediately before us, which is the erection within the District of Columbia, if the Senator pleases—if he prefers that to the limits of the city itself—of a statue on the public grounds connected with the capital of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator misapprehends. I only wished to ask him if he did not think there was a distinction between grounds under the control of the War Department—under the Secretary of War—and grounds under the control of the District of Columbia—the city grounds. I have no desire to divert the Senator. His discussion is altogether too serious for that.

Mr. BACON. I am glad the Senator recognizes it as such. I recognize it as serious. It is only a difference in degree.

Mr. President, of course if the President were to require that statue to be erected within the grounds around this Capitol building it would be a very much more marked thing than to erect it in the grounds of the War College; but the War College is none the less a part of the District of Columbia, under the paramount and absolute control of Congress.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator is right in saying that many of the statues erected in the District of Columbia required acts of Congress for their emplacement. The Senator has mentioned many such, but he omitted the statue of Martin Luther, for instance, another great German, for whose statue an act of Congress was necessary to place it on the parking.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad that the statue of that great German is there.

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes; the municipality has control of the streets, alleys, parks, and parking places. Congress has given them that control.

Now, I put this to the Senator: All the acts, therefore, granting permission for the erection of statues giving authority to obstruct the parks, public places, streets, etc., are essentially municipal. After the Spanish-American war many large guns were placed at the State, War, and Navy building——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will limit himself to a question and make his speech afterwards.

Mr. McCOMAS. This is my question. At the State, War, and Navy Department building many large Spanish guns were placed in front of the building after the Spanish-American war, and I put it to the Senator: Is it not true that if you wanted to put Spanish cannon at that point where Martin Luther's statue is or where Webster's statue is, or the like, it would require the authority of Congress, as the municipal government here, before you could locate those cannon at those places? Where, however, it is sought to locate them in an inclosure of the Department it requires no action of Congress, nor does it require any act of Congress to locate a statue in the inclosure of the War College or other like place.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not going to stop to discuss whether or not the putting of a cannon, which can be put up to-day and removed to-morrow if need be, and which is a matter which has no special significance except that it is a trophy of war, is to be considered in the same light at all as the question of the erection——

Mr. McCOMAS rose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me. It is not to be considered in the same light at all with the erection of a statue, which is for one of the purposes I indicated in the early part of my remarks—either as evidence of the love and gratitude of the people for services performed, or else as the erection of an ideal to be admired and emulated by our people.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator answer my question? Could you place on any grounds of the municipality, any of the places you have named, even a pedestal of granite with a cannon on it unless you have the authority of Congress?

Mr. BACON. Do you mean in the public parks?

Mr. McCOMAS. Any of the places.

Mr. BACON. I suppose the general authority which is given to the District may cover a thing of that kind. However, there is no use for us to go after anything but what we have before us.

Mr. McCOMAS. I want respectfully to deny——

Mr. BACON. As I do not wish to be diverted from the point, I decline to answer it, if the Senator puts it in that way. If the Senator wants me to say so more particularly, I want to present this case, and I say it is belittling it; it is not recognizing it as a serious matter, when you come to talk about the question whether or not the putting up of a cannon is something to be compared with the erection of a statue of Frederick the Great in this capital.

Mr. President, if we want to erect statues, even if we have no motive of gratitude to influence us—if we want to erect them as ideals, this country has furnished plenty of men in civil life and in military life, statues of whom could be put up as ideals to be emulated and admired by our people.

Mr. CARMACK. Robert E. Lee for instance.

Mr. BACON. Well, everybody of course knows what I think about that in common with all other Southerners. But confining now the list to the names of those who lived and died prior to the period of the civil war, we are rich in the number of great men, illustrious in deeds and in attainments and in sacrifices, worthy ideals for the pride and emulation of our people.

We can go back to Revolutionary times, and there are plenty of men. There is no statue in this capital to Hamilton, and there ought to be one to him. There is none to Jefferson, and there ought to be one to him. There is none to Jay or to Story or to Taney. There is none to Zachary Taylor, as a Senator sitting by me suggests. There is none to the elder Adams or the younger Adams, both of whom should have statues in this capital. There is none to Madison or Monroe. There is none to Clay or Calhoun or Benton or Crawford; and the list might be extended almost indefinitely of our own great men whose effigies should stand in bronze or in marble upon the streets and in the parks of this capital. There is none to numbers of men, civilians and soldiers, who in the Revolutionary war distinguished themselves in achieving for us our independence. There is none to Patrick Henry, or to Samuel Adams or to John Hancock. Why should we, if we are looking for ideals, go outside of our own country, and if we do go outside let us confine ourselves to those whose lives can furnish ideals to be emulated by our people, and not put up in the capital of the nation statues of men who in their lives stood for that which is diametrically opposed to every tradition and principle of this Government.

Mr. President, this is a serious practical matter, not simply as to the erection of a statue of Frederick the Great, but as to the future. I said I recognize the fact that the President of the United States is put in an embarrassing position; but is the acceptance and erection of a statue to be put on the ground that it was offered by a foreign monarch and could not be declined? Is that precedent to be established? If so, then whenever another foreign monarch offers a statue it is simply a question of courtesy as to its acceptance and its erection in the capital grounds, and this precedent will make it an impossibility in the future for any President, if the right of the President is recognized and the duty of the President is recognized, to fail to do otherwise than to accept any statue that may be offered here. We can all recall the names of many heroes of other governments whose statues we would not wish to see accepted and erected in Washington. Do we desire to see in the public places of our capital the monumental statues of Louis XIV, of Peter the Great, of Charles V, of the Duke of Alva and of Napoleon, and of others of like achievements? To this the American people will say no!

I merely wish now, as a matter reflective of public opinion on this subject, to read parts only of two editorials which appeared in the Washington Post on this subject. I will not read all of each editorial, because they deal with personalities, and I do not wish to complicate this matter with personalities. I have no object in the presentation of this matter except to protect this country against being the dumping ground of the statues of men who have been the heroes of other nations, but who have stood for things which we do not admire, which are not consistent with our traditions or with our principles, and are inconsistent with all that we look forward to and hope for in the future.

Mr. President, I will first read from an editorial in the Washington Post of January, 1904:

A communication published in our issue of Monday, the 18th instant, gives a great many excellent reasons why the United States Government should not make room upon any public reservation for a statue of Frederick the Great of Prussia.

We do not believe that history furnishes the record of a monarch who represented a more absolute antithesis of the republican idea. He was the very incarnation of autocracy, the very prophet of the gospel of the divine right of kings. The proposed monument will constitute a mockery of every principle Americans have been taught to honor and revere. From that pedestal, should the project ever be realized, will look down upon us the effigy of a sovereign who despised the multitude; who recognized no law save that of his personal caprice; who believed, as utterly as he believed in the existence of light and air, that the people were created for his service, to live according to his pleasure or to die for his ambitions, just as he might will. The only difference between Frederick the Great and Tiberius or Nero is one of circumstance, environment, and custom.

I do not read the remainder of that editorial. What I have read is sufficient to express the idea. Now, on the 1st of March of this year, this month, there was an editorial in the same paper, from which I read this extract:

The semiofficial announcement that the grounds of the American War College are to be adorned not only with a statue of Frederick the Great, but with effigies of Bonaparte and perhaps other illustrious campaigners, suggests the thought that our authorities, while they are about it, might as well enlarge and amplify their present scheme. Why not, in fact, convert the college grounds into an al fresco Valhalla and gather there the sculptured war gods of all lands and times.

Mr. President, on the question of authority, I wish to say this: The devotion of any part of the public grounds to the erection of a statue is a permanent alienation of that much of the ground. It is a permanent dedication of it. It is a permanent disposition of it; and the authority to alienate or to permanently dedicate or dispose of public ground is committed by the Constitution of the United States to Congress and does not otherwise rest within the discretion or power of any person.

I want to say one single other word in regard to Frederick the Great. It has been contended and urged through the press that he was a friend of the American colonies in their struggle with Great Britain, and that he even sent a sword to Washington, but all who are familiar with the history of those times know two facts. First, that there was not a single thought or utterance of Frederick the Great which was in sympathy with the principles for which the American colonies were struggling, and that, therefore, no such sympathy could have impelled him to any utterance of friendship.

Again, the fact is known that there was by him no recognition of the independence of the United States as there was by the Government of France. But the material thing, which I say is known to every man who is familiar with the history of those times, is that Frederick was the inveterate, unalterable foe of Great Britain and hated everything English with all the intensity of his nature, and that anything which he ever did or said which might be construed into friendship for the American colonies was not on account of any recognition of the righteousness of our cause or desire for the success of the principles which were involved, but purely on account of his hatred of the English people.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator surely does not mean to say that Frederick was not the ally of Great Britain in the Seven Years' war?

Mr. BACON. Certainly, I do not mean to say that.

Mr. LODGE. I understood him to say that Frederick was always the foe of Great Britain.

Mr. BACON. I did say he was the foe of Great Britain.

Mr. LODGE. He certainly did not like George the Third. He made that very obvious.

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. LODGE. But he was the ally of Great Britain all through the Seven Years' war.

Mr. BACON. He was the ally on occasions, as the most inveterate of national enemies will be allies of each other when it is to their interest to become so. But although he was closely related to him in blood, he was a most inveterate, outspoken, vehement enemy of the ruler of the English people of that time. Everybody knows that who knows the history of those times.

Mr. CARMACK. I think, although the Senator from Massachusetts probably knows better than I do, that England and France got into war, and France having joined the alliance against Frederick, he was in that way brought to the support of England. That is my recollection as to how it came about.

Mr. LODGE. They were engaged in common in war with France. France was at war with England.

Mr. BACON. Whether or not this statue is erected upon the public grounds of this capital, there is no doubt about what the German Emperor intended when he offered it. It was immediately after the erection of the statue of Rochambeau that this proffer was made, and it was made to offset that gift from France. Rochambeau had fought to secure our independence. The German Emperor would have made a complete offset to the erection of that statue if he had sent to us one of the Baron Von Steuben, who also fought in our Revolutionary Army. I repeat that nothing is farther from my desire than to do or say anything which can be offensive to the German Emperor. I have no doubt his offer was made in the best spirit. I would be delighted, if he would give us the effigy of some other man, to have it accepted.

In such case, however, I would want Congress to accept it, because Congress is the only one that has the power to do it, both on the ground which I have stated as to the exclusive right of Congress to say what shall be done with the public domain and what use shall be made of it, and upon the ground that it has been recognized from all time, so far as I know and so far as I have been able to find by somewhat diligent search, that the question as to what statues shall be erected and where they shall be erected is a matter exclusively within the province of Congress.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I believe that there is no question before the Senate regarding Frederick the Great or anybody else in connection with the appropriation bill; but inasmuch as I think the character of Frederick the Great has been grossly misrepresented, I think I ought to make a short statement to go with it.

Frederick the Great, it is true, was a great warrior. He was, in fact, the founder of the German Empire, and there are millions of people in this country, American citizens, who revere his name and idolize him almost as much as we do that of our own Washington. He had many qualities besides his great military genius which people admire, and inasmuch as there are many millions of Germans here who know something of his character and admire it much, I think it would be a very ungracious thing not to give place to a statue of him.

Our relations with the German Empire are friendly. We want to cultivate that friendship. The statue has been presented by the Emperor, and we ought not to raise any sharp issues about the political opinions of Frederick the Great. He knew the opinions and the hearts of the common people, which few rulers can appreciate. That, added to his military genius, enabled him to found the German Empire. Why should we not have his statue here and have his life written up? There is something for the youths to admire. I think his great character ought to be understood if we are going to discuss it. I think it would have been more in keeping with friendly relations with Germany and more satisfactory to German-Americans to have erected the statue without any criticism. I regret the harsh words which have been said, because they must grate on the feelings of millions of Germans who are citizens of the United States. I am sure the people will not object to his statue being erected at the capital of the nation. I regret that there should have been this harsh criticism of this gift of the Emperor of Germany.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the amendment in lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 2, has been reconsidered. That proviso was stricken out. I call the attention of the Senator to it. As it came to us, $20,000 was for contingent expenses; but the proviso was:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be used by the Chief of Staff in the office of the executive department of the War Department at Washington.

That was stricken out, and in lieu of it the provision, as I understand, on page 1 was inserted giving $3,000 for contingent expenses for that office.

I suggest to the Senator that if the proviso was stricken out, then in the discretion of the Secretary of War any part of the $20,000 could be used for that office as well as the $3,000.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment makes the measure conform to just what we have had for several years past, or as long as I can remember. The amendment on page 1 merely gives the Chief of Staff the amount for contingent expenses that has been given the Commanding General of the Army.

Mr. GORMAN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. PROCTOR. The matter on page 2, which was stricken out, was new matter inserted in the bill this year by the House. The committee found no special reason for inserting it and thought it might cause some embarrassment. They thought it much better that it should be stricken out and go into conference.

Mr. GORMAN. But taking out the proviso will leave, in addition to the specific appropriation of $3,000, any proportion of the $20,000 that the Secretary may give to that office. It is a small matter. I only wanted to call the attention of the Senator to it.

I understand the other provision, on page 23, as to the payment of our troops in Philippine coin has been reconsidered.

Mr. PROCTOR. On what page?

Mr. GORMAN. Page 23 at the bottom. If not, I desire to except the amendment. I refer to the amendment which provides—

That within the discretion of the Secretary of War it shall be lawful to pay the salaries of officers and the pay of enlisted men, as herein provided, to the extent of 25 per cent thereof, in Philippine currency, at the ratio of 2 Philippine pesos for $1 in United States currency.

Mr. PROCTOR. That amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Disagreed to?

Mr. PROCTOR. At my request.

Mr. GORMAN. That is all I desire to inquire about the bill.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate to any great extent in a discussion of this bill. The bill as framed appropriates over $77,000,000. As a matter of course, it will pass. Nothing that can be said on this side will by any possibility reduce the appropriations to be carried by the bill. The country seems to have permitted up to this time without a murmur, or with scarcely a murmur, these tremendous appropriations that have been made on account of preparations for war and the maintenance of the men in uniform. It has grown in the past eight years beyond all conception of the American people. It is the inauguration of a system for which the party in power is responsible.

They have said and said with force that with the acquisition of colonies a very large increase in the Navy was absolutely necessary, and also with a great deal of force that up to the time of the pacification of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands a large army was necessary; but now we are informed that peace reigns everywhere. The islands are pacified. There is no disorder or war in our new possessions. And yet this appropriation bill carries seventy-seven or seventy-eight million dollars for an army of sixty-odd thousand men.

During the time General Grant was President of the United States, immediately after the close of a war that cost millions of dollars, while our country was threatened on its western borders by nearly all the Indian tribes, while the political necessities of the Government, in the judgment of those in power, required an immense number of troops to be stationed in the States of the Union south of the Potomac, the average expenditure under those conditions on account of the Army during the last three years of his Administration was only $27,781,000 per annum.

But, Mr. President, the expenditures on account of the Army have grown during the last eight years until they have reached their present enormous proportions, and we are spending in a time of peace nearly $80,000,000. During the whole four years of Mr. Cleveland's first Administration only $95,000,000 was expended on account of the Army; during the four years of General Harrison's Administration, $97,000,000; in Cleveland's second Administration, $94,000,000, while under Mr. McKinley's first Administration $240,000,000 was expended. And now, during the last four years, including the appropriations in this bill, the enormous sum of $360,442,000 will have been expended.

Mr. President, I submit that there is no earthly necessity for such wasteful expenditure of the people's money. It has been said, I think by the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], that these appropriations for defense should be regarded in the nature of insurance. Well, sir, that may be true to some extent, but I submit that the premium, the amount the people are paying for this insurance, is too great. Our peace is no better secured now than it was under General Grant's Administration, and yet it costs for the Army alone, for every man, woman, and child in the United States to-day, a sum equivalent to a tax of nearly four dollars and a half to keep up this great military establishment at home, and about $8 per capita for the whole military establishment—fortifications, Army, and Navy.

Total army, navy, and fortification appropriations.

1886-1889, first Cleveland Administration, cost per capita	$2.99+
1890-1893, Harrison's Administration, cost per capita	3.27+
1894-1897, second Cleveland Administration, cost per capita	3.09+
1898-1901, first McKinley Administration, cost per capita	6.30+
1902-1905, second McKinley-Roosevelt Administration, cost per capita	8.93+

I submit, sir, that there is no necessity for it. There is no wisdom in it. The appropriations for fortifications which have been made and those that are to follow this bill are most extravagant. One hundred and forty million dollars are to be expended for the purpose of erecting fortifications along the seacoast and on the frontier of this country, one-half of which probably will be useless in the course of a very few years because of the improvements which are being made in methods of defense. But, Mr. President, I can do nothing except to enter a protest, a feeble one though it may be, against a policy which requires this enormous expenditure of the people's money.

I shall insert in the RECORD one or two tables, which I will not tax the time of the Senate to read, showing how these appropriations have grown and grown until they have reached this enormous sum in a time of peace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4594.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I rise to move to take up Calendar Order No. 170.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator from Indiana does not wish to take up the public-building bill for five minutes. At 2 o'clock the unfinished business comes up.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I suppose it is within the power of the Senate to take up the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not try to set aside the Philippine shipping bill. It relates to the repeal of a law which goes into effect, unless the bill is passed, on the 1st day of July, 1904, and we must have action on it. I do not wish to antagonize the Senator's bill, but I shall have to do so, of course, if he tries to displace the unfinished business. I shall have no choice.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator in effect displaced the public-building bill the other day.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; the shipping bill was not up.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The shipping bill was taken up after the public-building bill was partially considered.

Mr. LODGE. I think if the Senator will look at the Calendar he will find that the resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] remained the unfinished business.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Be that as it may, it is within the province of the Senate to decide now which bill shall first be considered. However, if the Senator's bill can be disposed of without delay this afternoon, so that the bill to which I refer may be taken up and considered also this afternoon, I shall not object to the Senator proceeding with the bill which is now the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has in mind the public-building bill which he has in charge?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is very much interested in that bill, wishes to be present during its consideration and that he was confined yesterday to his house by illness.

Mr. LODGE. He is to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. He is much better this morning, and I think he will be able perhaps to be out to-morrow. So I hope the Senator will not press that bill in the absence of the Senator from Maine, who especially stated to me that he would like to be present when it is considered.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Iowa knows very well that I would not press the bill if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is temporarily detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. ALLISON. I assume that the Senator would not.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly not. Both the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Iowa are in charge of appropriation bills, which have precedence over the bill which I wish considered. I wish to get it out of their way as soon as reasonably possible.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator that the Committee on Appropriations, of course, has charge of a portion of the appropriation bills, but not of all, and so far as that committee is concerned, there will not be an opportunity for the consideration of any appropriation bill for a week or ten days except the fortifications appropriation bill, which I presume will take very little time. So I hope there will be an opportunity for reaching the other bills, which I know are important, during the next few days. I would be very glad if the Senator would consent to delay the public-building bill for a day, so that the Senator from Maine may be here.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. My only desire, as the Senator knows, is that the public-building bill may not be unduly delayed by appropriation bills. But if the Senator is correct in his statement, and I have no doubt he is, that there will be no important appropriation bill before the Senate for some days to come——

Mr. ALLISON. Except the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Except the fortifications appropriation bill, and that there will probably be a chance to consider the public-building bill and other bills in the meantime, I will withhold my motion for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE AT PARIS, FRANCE.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4594) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris), at Paris, France.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish the Senator from New Jersey would explain the bill. It seems, from a casual reading, to be the incorporation of a company to transact business in France.

Mr. LODGE. The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is all right.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that it is simply an incorporation in order to allow the holding of property by these people, who have had property given to them in Paris. There is no obligation of the United States in any way to pay anything. The bill was carefully drawn so as to avoid any expenditure by the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. What I fear, Mr. President, is that at some time this corporation may appear here for some appropriation. If the Senator can assure me——

Mr. KEAN. I will state that I have also had that same fear, and I have tried to avoid in the bill any reference to any appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad that that has been discussed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have had the same fear and I want to avoid it. Therefore I offer this amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let my amendment be read and printed.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield temporarily, if this bill is not going to take any debate. I do not see why it should. It is a unanimous report of the committee and was most carefully prepared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the passage of this act shall in no manner, directly or indirectly, create any liability whatever on the part of the Government to aid such corporation at any time in any manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to inquire what is the occasion of requiring a corporation that wants to do business in Paris to report to our Secretary of State and to require the Secretary of State to report——

Mr. LODGE. If we are going to have the bill debated, I must insist on the unfinished business.

Mr. DANIEL. All right; go ahead with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota, but after that I must decline to yield for other bills.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator hear me before he decides that?

Mr. LODGE. This bill has been here a long time; it is in the way of other legislation, and I do not think, in justice to other Senators, I ought to yield further.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator listen to what I have to say before he decides against me?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4124) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Wanbliska, in Burleigh County, and Morton County, in the State of North Dakota.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out section 4 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 4. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of any other bridge or bridges, such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of its construction or after completion such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIPPING BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the bill is in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate, and all the amendments up to the present time have been concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer as a further amendment in the Senate the following proviso, to go at the end of the bill, at the end of section 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 8 the following proviso:

Provided, That such of the navigation laws of the United States as are in force in the Philippine Archipelago in regard to vessels arriving in the Philippine Islands from the mainland territory and other insular possessions of the United States shall continue to be administered by the proper officials of the government of the Philippine Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON I desire to yield temporarily to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me to make a request?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection myself; I do not, however, desire to take the floor on the bill and then yield against the suggestion of the chairman of the committee who has the bill in charge.

Mr. STEWART. I simply want to make a request.

Mr. LODGE. I desire, of course, to go on with the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection myself to yielding to the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. I can make a speech on the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senator making the request, of course.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have personally none in the world.

Mr. STEWART. The bill to secure pure milk was discussed at some length, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had some objections to it. I laid it over for him to look over and prepare any amendment he might desire. He has prepared amendments, I have accepted them, and there is nobody else objecting to the bill. Now, I want to know if after this bill is concluded we can not take up that bill and have a vote on it? I do not think there will be a word said, except the Senator from Missouri will offer his amendments, and no further explanation will be desired. I ask unanimous consent that when the shipping bill is through I can have a vote on the milk bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. How long will it probably consume?

Mr. STEWART. It ought not to take over five minutes. There will be no debate.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say I gave notice a week ago that I would move for an executive session as soon as the appropriation bills were out of the way, in order that some executive business might be considered. That may take some time. I do not want to assent to a bill being taken up that will take any time. I have no objection if it only involves taking a vote.

Mr. STEWART. Will you give us ten minutes?

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, that is all right. I will not object to that.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not think there ought to be in this sparse body now a unanimous consent given that will bind everyone; that is to say, if anybody wants to further discuss the bill the Senator from Nevada has in charge that the unanimous-consent agreement would prevent him from doing so.

Mr. STEWART. It will not do that. If anybody wants to discuss it further he can do so.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is all I care about in the matter.

Mr. STEWART. I do not believe there will be any more discussion required on the bill. Of course, it would not cut off any discussion.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, if this bill shall become a law, of which, of course, I have no doubt, it ought at least to express the purpose of the author of it. This I do not think it accomplishes in its present form.

Sections 1 and 2 of the bill taken together provide in effect that the coastwise laws in the United States in shipments between the United States and the Philippines shall apply both as to merchandise and passengers.

Section 3 of the proposed act provides that sections 1 and 2 shall have no application to trade in the islands themselves—that is to say, shall have no application to the interisland trade.

Section 6, as amended on motion of the chairman of the committee, provides in effect that after July 1, 1905, these laws shall have effect in ports of the Philippines. Sections 1 and 2, in connection with section 3, are inconsistent with a portion of section 6 as amended on the motion of the chairman of the committee to the extent which I have indicated.

More than that, Mr. President, section 6 of this bill as amended now repeals two important provisions of section 3 of the act of March 8, 1902; that is to say, in its present form it repeals the tonnage-tax provision of the act of March 8, 1902——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me, there is no repeal at all in the modified bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I repeat, Mr. President, the effect of the act as now amended repeals all of section 3 of the act of March 8, 1902, except what is expressly reproduced in this amendment. That portion of section 3 of the act of 1902 levying a tonnage tax and that portion regulating the lighterage and harbor business in the Philippines are omitted from it, and consequently would be repealed.

Mr. LODGE. What repealed them?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will call the attention of the Senator to it in a moment. Section 6, as it now stands, reads:

SEC. 6. That section 3 of the act approved March 8, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," is hereby amended so that it shall read—

It then reproduces only the first proviso in section 3 of the act of 1902, thereby repealing the provision of that section of the act of 1902 levying a tonnage tax, and also the second proviso of section 3 of the act of 1902.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think that the omission to reenact the part to which he refers repeals it?

Mr. CULBERSON. Unquestionably; because it provides that that section "shall hereafter read as follows," and the provisions to which I have referred are omitted from the reenacted clause.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly there was no such intention as that.

Mr. CULBERSON. So I understand; and I so stated at the beginning of what I intended to say. Mr. President, in order to perfect the bill, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by striking out all of section 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 6. That on and after the passage of this act the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all foreign vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago which are required by law to be levied, collected, and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from foreign countries: Provided, however, That until July 1, 1905, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States: And provided further, That the Philippine Commission shall be authorized and empowered to issue licenses to engage in lighterage or other exclusively harbor business to vessels or other craft actually engaged in such business at the date of the passage of this act, and to vessels or other craft built in the Philippine Islands or in the United States and owned by citizens of the United States or by inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CULBERSON. The effect of this amendment——

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Texas if that is a reproduction of section 3 of the act of March 8, 1902, except that he changes the date to 1905 and has left out the words "or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago?"

Mr. CULBERSON. Precisely. That is the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is an improvement of the section, and that it puts it beyond any question about the repealing of those clauses. I have no objection to that as I understand it. I think it makes a better section.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, while I have the floor, I desire to say that this bill on its merits is unsatisfactory to me. There is doubt in my mind whether even by July 1, 1905, there will be sufficient American tonnage from the Atlantic ports to meet the demands of commerce. It is true that in the recent hearing before the Committee on the Philippines the shipping interests declared most emphatically that there would be ample tonnage as early as July 1, 1904, but this was earnestly and seriously controverted by a large number of American shippers who were present at the hearing. When to this is added the fact that the War Department (including the Insular Bureau) the Philippine Commission, and the Commissioner of Navigation in his report for 1903, express doubt upon the subject, there is certainly ground for apprehension that, if it be the part of wisdom to put the coastwise laws in operation in the Philippines at all, 1905 is too early to do so.

If the Philippine trade is not disordered and embarrassed by lack of American ships to move it, a monopoly in American ships will certainly be created by this act. The creation of a monopoly of this trade in American ships can but increase the freight rates materially, as all admit, notwithstanding what has been said about competition between American shipowners, because combinations between American ships will be added to the vicious policy of monopoly. It is estimated that the price of binding twine will be increased a cent a pound to American farmers by the increase in the freight rates between this country and the Philippines.

But, Mr. President, the fact that an indefensible monopoly will be created, with its accompanying increase of freight rates, is not the only serious and substantial objection to this bill. It contravenes the commercial policy of the United States respecting the Philippines which was announced upon a memorable and historic occasion. In the preliminary consideration of the treaty with Spain the American commissioners, among them the distinguished author of this bill [Mr. FRYE], declared to the Spanish commissioners that the policy of the United States in the Philippines would be that of an open door to the world's commerce. Necessarily and obviously such a policy would place both the ships and merchandise of all nations upon terms of equality in the Philippines.

This policy, so far as merchandise is concerned, was unconditionally embodied in the first section of the act of March 8, 1902; but this bill proposes to reverse that policy as to ships by denying entry to Philippine ports of all except American vessels when entering Philippine ports directly or indirectly from the United States with American cargoes.

Undoubtedly, Mr. President, the United States may, for proper and satisfactory reasons, change its policy in this respect. But I can not conceive that justification for such action can be found in the single purpose to organize a monopoly in the trade between this country and the Philippines, which will be hurtful alike to the Filipinos and to the great body of American consumers of Philippine products.

[Mr. PATTERSON'S entire speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. LODGE. That amendment, a substitute for section 6, I accept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

Mr. TELLER. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is to lay on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask permission to print as a part of my remarks in connection with this bill certain statements and testimony in regard to the shipping employed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"131 STATE STREET, BOSTON, MASS.,
"February 15, 1904.

"Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
"Chairman of the Committee on the Philippines,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: I am told that it has been represented to the State Department that Senate bill 2259, favorably reported by your committee, and reserving to American ships American commerce with the Philippine Islands, transgresses the principle of the 'open door' in the Orient.

"This 'open door,' as I have understood and advocated it, means equal treatment for the merchandise of all nations in the matter of tariff dues. So far as I am aware, neither the United States nor any other government interested in the 'open door' has attempted to regulate the matter of ocean transportation. 'Four years ago,' so declares the British Board of Trade Report, 'Russia signified that she proposed to treat as 'coastwise traffic' the trade between her European seacoasts and the Asiatic ports in her control,' and it does not appear that any remonstrance against this course was ever entered by the State Department, which has so vigorously insisted upon equality of tariff opportunity in the various Asiatic 'spheres' of European influence.

"Indeed, Russia had long before this taken steps to bar foreign shipping out of her Asiatic commerce, and, as a matter of fact, this same thing has been done in a characteristic and effective way by every one of the maritime powers of Europe.

"There was a time, not so remote but that many men now living can recall it, when the best traffic of the Orient was conveyed in American ships. It was the swift-keeled Yankee clippers that brought the first of the season's tea and the choicest of Eastern spices and silks to Hamburg, Marseille, and London, as well as to Boston and New York. These were the years when the Stars and Stripes and the house flags of great American merchants were a familiar sight in every oriental harbor from the north gates of the Yellow Sea to Singapore.

"The best shipwrights and sailors of Europe could not compete on even terms with our fast and powerful clippers. And when steam began to come in the alert American merchants were quickest to recognize the change. Years ago, even before our civil war, iron screw steamers of a fine type were launched on our Atlantic coast for East India and China commerce. But clipper and propeller alike encountered a foe which they could not overcome. It was the lavish and persistent European subsidy.

"Great Britain set the first example by a treasury grant creating the steam line which is now world famed as the Peninsular and Oriental Company. She was followed by France with the Messageries Maritimes, by Spain and Holland, and by Germany. Steadily the American ships were crowded out of Eastern waters. They lost their share of the European trade. Presently they were fighting with their subsidized rivals for our own American trade with the Orient, and they have now lost almost all of this that comes to the ports of the Atlantic. The European governments did not ordain in so many words that our flag should be debarred from the carrying trade of their Asiatic dependencies, but that was the actual, the inevitable, and unquestionably the intended effect of enormous subventions like the $1,700,000 now given to the Peninsular and Oriental, the equal grants to the French Line, and the $1,330,000 bestowed for fifteen years upon the North German Lloyd Company. Not content with this huge payment, the German authorities now transport on the imperial railways at a merely nominal rate goods intended for export by German steamers, and one result is that Hamburg and Bremen, which used to be crowded with American ships, do not now see the Stars and Stripes from one year's end to another.

"Nor does the effect upon our American shipping cease with the specific European vessels that earn subsidy. Around the subsidized lines as a nucleus, fostered and supported by them, have grown up allied companies and large fleets of ordinary cargo craft that profit indirectly by, though not direct sharers in, these European subventions. An American vessel clearing from the Orient for a port of the United Kingdom or the Continent would feel now the emotions of the lonely and desolate Wandering Jew. To all intents and purposes the European powers that hold colonial possessions in the East have, by the adroit discrimination of subsidy, aided by cheap wage rates, banished the United States merchant flag from a trade where it long flew preeminent.

"Having thus forced American ships out of their colonial commerce, the European powers are now moving to force them out of our own colonial commerce also. Only two American steam lines now cross the North Pacific to the Orient—one, the Pacific Mail, from San Francisco; the other, the Boston Steamship Company and Northern Pacific Railway Service, from Puget Sound.

"Paralleling the Pacific Mail the Japanese Government has established a steam line with a subsidy of half a million dollars a year. Paralleling the course of the Boston and Northern Pacific ships the Japanese Government has created another steam line, with a subsidy of $330,000. Out of Vancouver, a few miles north of Seattle, the British Government has in operation a line of three British steamers, with the aid of another subsidy of $300,000. Some of these Japanese steamers run to Manila; the British steamers stop at Hongkong, a few hundred miles north of the Philippines. These subsidized foreign concerns, with dividends guaranteed out of their national treasuries, deprive our American ships of freight and passengers. Although the Boston Steamship Company's service is conducted by experienced and capable managers, it has never made any profit, and unless Congress passes this Philippine legislation or grants some measure of immediate relief these American ships will be withdrawn from the route or transferred to foreign colors.

"This is precisely the result sought by the European governments. Not content with fighting American shipowners abroad, their foreign rivals, grown emboldened, are fighting them right in our own country. It is a fact of much significance to the State Department that the memorial offered the other day in the New York Chamber of Commerce against the bill reserving to American ships American commerce with the Philippines was presented by the New York agent of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, of Bremen, Germany, subsidized for its eastern service for $1,330,000 a year. Moreover, the memorial was seconded by the American representative of the British shipping and mercantile house of Smith, Bell & Co., Manila agents for eight British steamship lines with 300 steamers, among them the British-Vancouver Company, with a subsidy of $300,000 a year.

"'Under such competition,' wrote the late Hon. William C. Whitney, 'it is quite easy to conjecture what will become of the American flag and our resources in the way of a naval reserve in the North Pacific.'

"To sum up, the European powers, by subsidy, bounty, and other discriminations, have completely driven American shipping out of their commerce with their possessions in the Orient. They are now moving to the next and most effective step, of driving American shipping out of our own commerce with our own possessions in the Philippines. Because of the fierceness of party divisions in the United States and the apparent indifference of the Middle West to our maritime interests we, as a nation, have not thus far been able to meet subsidy by subsidy. But Senate bill 2259, extending to the Philippine trade the principle of coastwise protection—our historic national policy, over which our parties have never divided—offers a direct and consistent method of saving the remnant of our Pacific fleet and retaining in our own hands the control of our own communication with our East Indian commercial ports and naval stations.

"Foreign governments which, by subsidizing their ships, have driven our ships out of the Orient and almost off the seas would show an egregious assurance if they objected to the pending measure as a violation of the principle of the "open door." As a matter of fact, this reserving to American ships of at least our American trade with our Philippine dependencies is an act of absolute self-defense against the aggressive maritime policy of Europe. We must do this or we shall soon be forced to the humiliating plight of not being able to reach the Philippines save by the grace of our rivals in trade under the flags of our possible enemies in war.

"Sincerely, yours,

"WINTHROP L. MARVIN."

[From the Marine Journal, New York, January 30, 1904.]

"THE PHILIPPINE CONTROVERSY.

"Foreign interference in national legislation against the interest of the American merchant marine was never so active and aggressive as at the present time. The representatives of foreign ships, aided by Anglo-Americans doing business with the Philippines, have camped on the trail of the Philippine bill introduced in the House and Senate and are making the fight of their lives for its defeat. The scene on the floor of the Maritime Exchange of the great port of New York, recently, where foreigners and foreign sympathizers succeeded in stifling the voice of patriotic Americans, through a majority in sympathy and membership, caused shame and mortification to those present who had been taught to revere the Stars and Stripes and all that they call for.

"There is no help for the condition that exists in the Maritime Association at the present time, as the foreign influence predominates. There is, however, hope in Congress for those who attempted to carry out that association's intention by placing the American-Philippine Islands trade in the same relations to the American ship as Hawaii, Porto Rico, and all other outlying possessions of the United States.

"The American shipping interest is to be congratulated that there are no treaty obligations with other nations or anything to prevent Congress giving the carrying trade between the Philippines and the United States exclusively to American vessels, and Congress, we believe, can be depended upon to do its full duty to the shipping industry in this particular, as it has done in the past to all other protected industries of the country, notwithstanding the opposition of foreign corporations and their Anglo-American representatives, who had hoped to thrive on the losses that would be sustained by American shipping through lack of proper protective legislation in their interest on the Philippine question."

[From the New York Commercial, Friday, February 5, 1904.]

"WHERE FOREIGNERS ARE AFRAID.

"The members of the Senate Philippines Committee and the Washington correspondents of the great newspapers of the United States were all amazed and disappointed at the very conspicuous absence of the foreign shipping agents from the public hearing of that committee on January 21. Although the committee had favorably reported the bill reserving the carrying trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands exclusively to American vessels, it was thought that it would be wise to give the opposition to the bill an opportunity to be heard.

"The foreign shipping agents only a week before had appeared in large numbers before the directors of the New York Maritime Exchange, there to record their opposition to the Philippines shipping bill. They had pointed out that it would inflict great injury on foreign shipping and confer a great benefit upon American shipping, on which account they did not want the Maritime Exchange to favor the bill's passage. These were the people of all people that the Senate Philippines Committee wanted to hear. What they said would be most enlightening and instructive to the committee, and the Washington newspaper correspondents would have seen to it that no point of value or interest would have been withheld from the American reading public.

"If their opposition was based on good grounds, why should not the foreign shipping agents appear before Congress and state the reasons for their opposition? The answer is that the foreigners lacked the courage to go to Congress and state their case. Instead, they worked upon the minds of the people who ship coal to and buy hemp from the Philippine Islands, pointing out to them that American ships would earn larger freights than foreign ships were earning, and that this was good reason why the coal and the hemp people should oppose the bill.

"But the Senate Philippines Committee was not deceived, the Washington newspaper correspondents were not deceived, and the American people are not deceived. They all looked straight through the coal people and the cordage manufacturers and saw skulking behind them the foreign shipping agents—those whose interests were in danger, but who lacked the courage to come out, man fashion, and say so.

"Congress is elected to promote and safeguard American interests. How sagacious the foreign shipping agents were in abstaining from presenting their case to Congress! But they performed a greatly needed and most valuable service when they so bravely and publicly stated their opposition at the meeting of the New York Maritime Exchange. For that emphatic expression, arrogant as it was, American shipping interests owe the foreign shipping agents a lasting debt of gratitude.

"In Congress lie all of the hopes of those advocating American shipping; hence they were in evidence at that public hearing. But it is the action of Congress that arouses the fears of the foreign shipping agents, and yet they lacked the courage to appear before Congress and say why their interests should be protected—why American shipping interests should be sacrificed. Congress understands; the people understand; the foreign shipping interests understand. The cat is out of the bag; the source of opposition to American shipping interests has shown itself at last—not before Congress, to be sure, but, most fortunately, where it could be seen and heard, in New York.

"And Congress will not fail to appreciate the delicate compliment paid to its members by the absence of the foreign shipping agents from the public hearing on the Philippine shipping bill. We should say, after carefully considering all of the facts in the case, that the chances for the passage of the Philippine shipping bill are most promising, thanks to the impulsive activity of the foreign shipping agents in New York and their discreet avoidance of Washington."

[From the New York Commercial, Saturday, February 6, 1904.]

"IT'S 'UP' TO CONGRESS.

"In the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of a recent date the attitude and the action of the foreign shipping element in the New York Maritime Exchange are discussed at length and condemned with earnestness and force. Our Pacific coast contemporary has no patience with those un-American and hostile commercial interests which seek to shape American policies and to control American maritime legislation.

"'It is this action of foreigners,' it says, 'working in the interests of foreign ships and against the interests of American ships, which goes into the record as the action of the maritime association of the foremost port of the United States. It is high time that the minority—the Americans who belong to this association—should withdraw from it and let it run under its own colors, and not masquerade as an American maritime association.'

"Happily, the prompt protests of the American minority—if it is really a 'minority'—prevented the foreigners from putting the association on record in that way, and thus from using such a record for lobbying against the Philippines bills. We hasten to inform our good American contemporary in Seattle that a compromise was effected between these discordant elements—an agreement to eschew further discussion of the Philippines bills in view of the wide divergence of opinion on the subject and because, for special reasons, harmony in the association is particularly desirable just now.

"The incident was valuable, however, in that the wide publicity given to it served to put our lawmakers at Washington on notice that only the most un-American and thoroughly selfish motives lead any members of the New York Maritime Exchange to oppose the two pending bills. The influence of these 'nitlanders' at Washington has thus been discounted long in advance. They can have no possible standing before either shipping committee in Congress. They would be 'laughed out of court' if they should ever appear there.

"In fact, their nerve failed them before the time arrived for the last committee hearing on the subject. They didn't dare put in an appearance.

"The one reason why these foreigners appear to dominate in the Maritime Exchange is the failure of successive Congresses through half a century to extend to foreign-trade American ships the same measure of protection that they have to the coastwise and lake craft. The time has not come for the Americans in the Maritime Exchange to withdraw. The time has come, however, for Congress to pass laws the effect of which would be to Americanize the institution. Once give our merchant marine the protection that is its right, and within a year or two 90 per cent of the exchange's membership would represent American interests."

[Statement of Mr. C. B. Orcutt, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company. The Huntington Yard at Newport News, Va.]

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussions which have taken place here today, and from a shipbuilding standpoint I have noticed with special interest the statements which have been made that there will not be sufficient tonnage in which to carry the business offered, if the present bill before the committee is passed. As shipbuilders we are very much interested in that problem, and we hope from our standpoint that it is true, for it will be manifestly necessary for new ships to be constructed, and that right speedily, to meet the situation if this bill passes.

"Well, now, what could our plant do in that connection? Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I represent the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, at Newport News, as already stated. We have an investment there of something like fifteen millions of money. We are employing to-day over 6,300 men, almost entirely in the construction of naval vessels. Now, if new tonnage is required for this Philippine business, it will be interesting to you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, to know what one individual shipbuilding concern can do in the way of bringing forth new tonnage.

"If we could find some one who would give us an order to-morrow for ten 10,000-ton ships, suitable for the Philippine trade, we would engage, Mr. Chairman, under contract and penalty clauses attached, to build the first one of those ships and deliver it, certainly in nine months' time. We would contract to deliver the additional nine ships one about every four months thereafter.

"What would happen? Instead of employing 6,300 men, our pay roll would run up to something like 10,000 or 12,000 men. And they would all be paid good wages."

"So I leave the question of tonnage and come to the one question which I believe is the problem which this committee will have to wrestle with: Will the restriction of this trade to American-built vessels cause a rise in freight rates so as to injure those people—so as to injure the public? There have been several gentlemen who have in part answered that question, but I want to answer it. I want to try to answer it so that it will be understood. I want to say that the immediate effect of this bill will probably be to raise the freights; and mind you, I qualify that—I say 'probably'—and I will explain later. And I want to say that the ultimate effect of it—and I look for the ultimate effect to come inside of three years—will be to reduce the freight rate, and I will explain why.

"Hawaii has been talked of, but that is not exactly a parallel case to the Philippines. Porto Rico is; and I have here actual charter parties which show that we are making freight rates to Porto Rico to-day lower than they were ever made in the world. That is not the result of subsidized French ships and that is not the result of the general ocean conditions, because that is a trade in which the subsidized French vessels did not engage, and that is a reduction that came straight from American competition. Now, let me explain.

"Before that trade was restricted to American vessels we would make one of these charter parties go to Porto Rico. We knew from experience we would find foreign tramp steamers waiting to take molasses and other crops back, and we knew the chances were our vessels would have to come back light—to run back to Georgia, for example, and get ties and come along—one of your little three-cornered voyages such as they make in the Pacific.

"Now, we know when we charter a vessel to go out there, not that we won't get a cargo, but the chances are we will get a cargo. Before this trade was restricted to our vessels we were considering $2.25 on molasses, an exceptionally low freight. To-day we are taking it at $1.60. It is a low freight, but it is better for us. Why? If we can go out there with a cargo and collect $1.60 on that and come back with another cargo and collect $1.60 on that, that comes pretty near $3.20 a voyage. Of course that is cut down by the port charges and expenses there, but still that leaves us something better than the $2.25 that we were paid originally. And here is a charter party between J. H. Flitner & Co., agents, of Boston, and the Boston Molasses Company to take molasses at 80 cents a barrel, which is at $1.60 the regular hogshead, and Flitner & Co.'s letter states right here—and I will leave this with you for your consideration—that it is the lowest rate he ever knew. Not only that, but as soon as the Americans discovered what the business was in the island they went to work and built three first-class vessels—the Ponce, the San Juan, and the Pathfinder—and put them in the business. So these people got better commercial advantages than they did before, and they got their stuff cheaper, and their products are carried away cheaper than they were before.

"That is what has happened by putting the American coasting laws on Porto Rico, and there is not another solitary explanation of it in the world.

"That is what is going to happen in the Philippines. Mr. THAYER spoke about our developing a certain type of vessels. That is exactly what will happen. When we know we can go to Manila with something on board and stand a show not of having those two English houses in Manila holding the whole thing in their hands and saying 'Come,' and he cometh very suddenly, but when we go there and it has to be an American vessel and those two English houses can not dictate and procure a foreign vessel, when we know that we have a cargo to take out and a cargo to bring back, then we get paid both ways and we can afford to carry the cargoes cheaper. There will be a type of vessel. The vessel will be of a large carrying capacity, and, although it will bring freight down to where it is to-day, yet it will yield a profit, so that I do not hesitate to tell you—and I think the chairman and those of you who are familiar with shipping will bear me out—that the result of putting this law in force will be to the benefit of all; for there is a trade where both parties are benefited, and you will see it. If the Government gives us the coal out and we have the products of this country to bring back, where we are paid on both legs of the run, we can afford to do both legs cheaper than where we make one leg for money and the other for loss. That ought to be plain to any man."

IMPORTS FROM THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Total imports from the Philippine Islands to United States in fiscal year ending June 30, 1903:

	Tons.
Manila hemp	55,512
Sugar	9,386
Tobacco and cigars	125
Total imports of merchandise	65,023

Hemp, a bulky article, would require for shipment 55,000 net tons of shipping.

The list of steam tonnage available for Atlantic-Suez Canal trade to the Philippines, as stated in report of hearing January 21, before Senate Committee on the Philippines, includes 74,764 net tons.

But good steamships in a year can make not one, but two, round voyages to and from the Philippines. So that all the Manila hemp brought to both coasts of the United States in the fiscal year 1903 could be conveyed by one-half of 55,000 tons, or 27,500 net tons of steamers, each steamer making two voyages.

The 9,386 tons of sugar and the 125 tons of tobacco making up the rest of our imports from the Philippines in the fiscal year 1903—sugar being a relatively compact and heavy article—could be conveyed in steamers of a dead weight capacity of about 9,500 tons, representing substantially a net tonnage of 5,000. So that our total imports from the Philippines for the fiscal year 1903 could have been conveyed in 27,500 net tons plus 5,000 net tons of steamers, or 32,500 net tons.

One-half the net steam tonnage on the Atlantic-Suez Canal available list—74,764 net tons.

In other words, the steam tonnage presented as available for the Philippine trade via the Suez Canal out of our Atlantic seaports is twice as large as would be required to convey our entire import commerce from the archipelago.

This estimate takes no account of the 145,000 gross tons of American steamers in oriental trade on the Pacific Ocean, or of the 100 large American deep-sea sail ships of 350,000 tons deadweight capacity.

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS IN REGARD TO AMERICAN SHIPBUILDING, AND THE PRESENT STATE OF THE MERCHANT MARINE OF THE UNITED STATES.

[Seattle, Wash., February 9, 1904.]

"Question 1.—Present condition of shipbuilding plants on the Pacific coast?

"Aside from Government work there is no shipbuilding of any importance in hand in any of the Pacific coast yards. Taken all together the Pacific coast yards are now building one coaster, 150 feet long, wood; one tug, 115 feet long, wood; two tugs, 55 feet long, wood; one coaster, 136 feet long, steel; one coaster, 185 feet long, steel. The remainder of the work in hand consists of engines, boilers, and repairs for existing vessels. No vessels of any kind for foreign trade are under construction.

"Question 2.—The amount of building done as compared with the last few years?

"The condition of the shipbuilding industry in the United States seems to have reached a crisis, and about the only hopeful thing that can be said about it is that it can not well get worse. Taking the whole country over there is not a single merchant vessel of any importance that has been laid down during the last year. For more than two years no order has been given for a single ship for the foreign trade of the United States. Practically all of the new construction the shipyards of this country have been doing lately has been Government, coastwise, and Lake vessels.

"Question 3.—Are conditions growing worse or better for this industry; and the reasons therefor?

"The prosperity and advancement of the shipbuilding industry are dependent upon two things: First, demand for ships; second, competition on an equal footing with foreign builders.

"The work done for coastwise and island commerce can in no wise be regarded as a reasonable gauge or limit of the possibilities of the shipbuilding industry. In order that it may develop and prosper it must have the full field before it, with the opportunity not only to build American ships for competition with foreign-built ships, but to build ships in competition with foreign builders. The ability, advantages, and inclination are not wanting in this country necessary to vie with and eclipse European nations in shipbuilding; but the opportunity has not yet come, and in the present state of American commerce it never will. The conditions are undoubtedly growing worse, in regard to the demand for American ships, for three reasons: First, greater first cost as compared with foreign ships, entailing a greater amount of invested capital. Second, greater cost of operating as compared with foreign ships. Third, the growing and powerful effect of foreign subsidies.

"So serious has this become and so great is the handicap thus indirectly loaded upon American shipowners that, in the words of the president of one of the largest American steamship companies, 'the point has been reached when American ships will either be compelled to go out of commission or be transferred to foreign flags.' The cost of American-built ships is from 25 per cent to 75 per cent greater than that of English-built ships. This is partly due, of course, to the higher wages paid and partly to the protective tariff upon shipbuilding materials, but even these could be overcome if there were sufficient work to keep American shipyards continually busy for a sufficient length of time to enable them to develop methods and systems to bring the shipbuilding art to one of manufacturing and to reduce the percentage of fixed expenses. This has been done in other lines of industry, the examples of which are well known. American engines and bridges are built in successful competition with foreign work by sheer force of system and introduction of piecework and specializing, as regards both plant and labor.

"So long as the cost of production, therefore, is so much greater in the United States than it is in Europe there is no hope of competing on an equal footing with the latter; but if by any means a stimulus be given to American shipping which will permit of its competing on anywhere near an equal basis with foreign vessels, and creating a demand for ships from American owners, the development of the shipbuilding industry will be such that by the time the commerce of our own country is carried in our own ships our shipyards will be in a position to reach out for foreign work. The fact is, however, that of recent years the work in our shipyards, confined necessarily to a limited field, has been extremely spasmodic, and the development of this industry has been hampered because of the constantly decreasing demand for American ships.

"Question 4.—Is there necessity for Government aid; if so, in what way do you think the Government can best help?

"Statistics of work done by American shipyards, and of that on hand and in prospect at the present time, demonstrate the necessity of aid from the General Government, and this must take the form of legislation in but two directions: First, protection to the product of American shipyards; second, the creation of a demand for American ships by removing the handicap under which they are at present operated and placing them on an equal footing with foreign ships in the commerce of the world.

"The case is urgent, and affects not only the shipbuilding industry, but that of the entire nation. Our merchant marine is gone. We have need of 20 per cent of the world's steam tonnage to handle our commerce, and we have ships to handle less than 9 per cent of it. We had 108,000 tons more registered tonnage before the civil war than we have now, and instead of our merchant fleet doing the majority of the carrying business of the world our own commerce is practically in the hands of foreign ships—last year it amounted to $100,000,000. We are building up a great navy for the protection of American commerce, and, at the present rate of decline, by the time it is completed there will be nothing to protect. We are going to build the Panama Canal, but by the time it is completed we will have no merchant marine to receive its benefits.

"Our merchant ships have been 'run out of business' by the extra cost of operating, caused by our shipping laws and by the subsidies received by their competitors. This state of affairs is positively inexcusable, as it is appalling, and would warrant desperate means for recovery.

"The first sure and effective means by which American ships can obtain any considerable share of the foreign trade of our country is by the policy of subsidies. It may not be theoretically correct, but its result will be to place American shipping on an equal footing with its competitors at least, and the benefits received thereby will be far-reaching. All other maritime countries seem to find it necessary. England has always recognized the necessity of fostering her merchant marine and of striving for supremacy on the sea, in business as well as in war, and does not hesitate to adopt any means to secure that end. Consider the latest subsidy contract for twenty years with the Cunard Company—$350,000 a year for each ship, $13,000,000 loaned at 2½ per cent interest to build them. The Canadian steamers on the Pacific receive $110,000 a year from their own government and an additional subsidy from the British Government. French ships are heavily subsidized. Japan subsidizes her ships as high as $260,000 a year for one line.

"Germany is a protected country, but the last few years have witnessed a tremendous impetus to her shipping and shipbuilding. This has been due partly to the general expansion of German trade, but it has been backed up and balanced by subsidies, and by a remission of duties upon shipbuilding materials, to which the Government was forced to come by the same conditions as now confront the United States, and it has been successful to a surprising degree. It is out of the question to suppose that American ships can enter such a field as this or that American capital will be invested in ships without equal advantages, and with the added load of 50 per cent greater cost of operating.

"It is said that the great ocean greyhounds of the Atlantic could not be operated continuously without the substantial subsidies paid them by their Governments. How is it possible for any ship without such aid, let alone one that has cost more in the first place, and that has absolutely no advantage, to compete with them? Subsidies to our own ships may not be logical or consistent with our general policies, but such is the nature of the competition that we have to face that it is absolutely necessary, and nothing else will succeed with the same certainty.

"Aside from this, there is no time to experiment or argue over the matter. The case demands something positive and sure, and money thus spent will be returned with compound interest to all classes of producers in the country, not only by holding the commerce which already exists, but by opening up new channels of trade. It is a comparatively small commission to the shipowner, and, after all, it does no more than to place him on the same basis with his competitors.

"Question 5.—What, in your opinion, is the length of time the shipyards of the Pacific coast can run without Government aid?

"It is questionable whether the shipyards on the Pacific coast could have been maintained as long as they have, certainly not of anything like their present magnitude, if it had not been for the Government contracts, which have furnished not only them, but the principal eastern yards, with the most, if not practically all, of the work that has been done for the last few years at any rate.

"So that, under existing circumstances, the length of time these shipyards can run can be said to be limited by the completion of Government contracts, or the continuance of the liberal policy of building Government vessels. On this basis it would be possible to tide over the deadlock in the shipping business by providing sufficient Government work to keep the important shipyards busy and by such legislation as would serve to distribute the work to some extent. This can only be done by providing that a certain proportion of vessels appropriated for shall be built on the Pacific coast and by allowing a percentage on all Pacific coast contracts sufficient to balance the unavoidably greater cost, thus placing all builders on an equal footing. Both of these methods have been customary in the past and had the desired effect; but the latest appropriations have had no such provision, and the '4 per cent differential' formerly allowed to Pacific coast bidders was revoked by act of Congress a year ago. The consequence is that since that time all Government contracts have been made with eastern shipyards.

"While a liberal and considerate policy in this direction would serve to aid the shipbuilding industry for a few years, and possibly to uphold it temporarily, it could not be advocated as a solution, for its operation is necessarily limited, and permanent good can only be done by such legislation as will benefit the shipping business in general, as already outlined. As the effects of the latter, however, even if undertaken at once, could not be expected to be other than gradual, it is also regarded as equally important that aid should be given also by the National Government in the way first mentioned to tide over the interim.

"Question 6.—What special advantages has Puget Sound as a location for a great shipbuilding industry?

"First. On account of many well-known natural advantages it is unquestionably the best suited locality for a general shipping center that there is on the Pacific coast, and, other things being equal, such a location is particularly well suited for a great shipbuilding industry.

"Second. It is the only location on the Pacific coast where coal can be had direct from the mines in the immediate vicinity.

"Third. Not only is the transportation of steel and other shipbuilding materials from the eastern mills more direct and rapid than at any other locality on the coast, but the same advantages that make it desirable for shipbuilding will in the future result in the establishment of factories for the production of such materials.

"Fourth. Particularly is this the case with steel and iron, which are practically the only materials which need be seriously considered in connection with shipbuilding. There is the greatest probability, amounting to almost a certainty, that sooner or later the production of steel and iron on Puget Sound will be practically accomplished on a large scale. One thing is certain, that if steel and iron are ever produced on the Pacific coast, it will be on Puget Sound; and this of itself, without any other consideration, would positively settle the question of the most desirable location for a shipbuilding plant.

"Fifth. Until this is done, and even if it should never be accomplished, Puget Sound is preeminently more advantageously situated as regards steel and iron than any other point on the coast, being connected by direct rail routes with the Great Lakes, which are at present the center of the steel and iron industry of the United States.

"Sixth. Compared with locations on the eastern coast, Puget Sound possesses an immense advantage in a mild climate, which interferes with the carrying on of work to a minimum extent.

"Seventh. Wooden shipbuilding has naturally always flourished on Puget Sound for evident reasons, and in this regard there is no comparison whatever with any other location on the coast. But wooden shipbuilding cuts no figure with the general industry in modern times and must be considered as entirely separate therefrom.

"Eighth. On the basis that Puget Sound will be the center of commerce and manufacturing on the Pacific coast, which it surely will be, the ready transportation on this inland sea between the mills and factories situated at various points on its shores and the innumerable excellent harbors with deep water offer unequaled possibilities for the development of a great shipbuilding industry.

"The following items of statistics will serve to an appreciation of the force of the arguments above presented:

"In round numbers, the world's steam tonnage amounts to 25,000,000 tons, four-fifths of which is used on salt water. Over half of this tonnage is owned by Great Britain, while the United States comes in with but 1,276,046 tons. Most of our tonnage is engaged in the domestic trade, and only eight companies of any importance (owning over 10,000 tons each) run their vessels in the foreign trade, or even in the trade of the Philippines, Hawaii, or Porto Rico.

"The Hamburg-American Line alone earns yearly $13,000,000 in passenger and freight receipts from the foreign trade of the United States.

"The steamship requirements of our trade with the several grand divisions of the world are, approximately:

	Steamers.	Gross tons.
Europe	700	3,200,000
North America	250	400,000
Asia-Australia	100	400,000
Africa	80	380,000
South America	110	300,000
Tank steamers	70	250,000
Total	1,335	4,930,000

"At present only 8.8 per cent of the requirements is being covered by American vessels. To do our own business we need 20 per cent of the world's steam tonnage employed in foreign and colonial trade.

"The conditions of the subsidy agreement of 1903 between the British Government and the Cunard Steamship Company are as follows:

"'1. The Cunard Company is to build two large steamers of high speed for the Atlantic trade.

"'2. The agreement is to remain in force for twenty years from the time of the completion of the second vessel.

"'3. The Cunard Company pledges itself until the expiry of the agreement to remain a purely British undertaking.

"'4. During the period of the agreement the Cunard Company is to hold at the disposal of the Government the whole of its fleet, including the two new vessels, the Government being at liberty to charter or purchase all or any of the vessels at agreed rates.

"'5. The Cunard Company also undertakes not to unduly raise freight rates or to give any preferential rates to foreigners.

"'6. The Government is to lend the money for the construction of the two new vessels charging interest at 2½ per cent per annum.

"'7. The Cunard Company is to repay the loan by annual payments extending over twenty years.

"'8. From the time the new vessels begin to run the Government is to pay the Cunard Company £150,000 per annum.'

"The British Admiralty, which inquired into the whole subject of subsidies for merchant vessels suitable for auxiliary cruisers in time of war, reported as follows:

"'We have inquired carefully into the initial cost of vessels possessing a speed of 20 knots and upward, and also into the amount of annual subsidy which would be required by a commercial company toward making good the loss which would be sustained in peace time by running such vessels.

"'These costs may be provided either by—

"'First. The Admiralty guaranteeing a sum representing the first cost of each ship, thus enabling a shipowner to raise the capital at 3 per cent instead of 5 per cent which he would otherwise have to pay.

"'Second. The contribution by the Admiralty of a lump sum toward the first cost of the ship, thereby reducing the outlay on the part of the owner.

"'Third. An annual payment extending over an agreed period.'

"Adopting the principle of an annual payment, they estimate the subsidies to be paid to vessels of varying speed as follows:

Average ocean speed.	Annual subsidy.
20 knots	£9,000
21 knots	19,000
22 knots	40,000
23 knots	67,500
24 knots	110,500
25 knots	149,000
26 knots	204,000

"The difference in the cost of wages paid to the crew of an American ship and of a British crew, of exactly the same number and for exactly the same ship, is seen in the following example of a vessel which was transferred from the British to the American flag:

	American.	British.
Captain	$125.00	$100.00
First officer	75.00	47.50
Second officer	60.00	35.00
Chief engineer	125.00	90.00
First assistant engineer	70.00	60.00
Second assistant engineer	60.00	35.00
2 oilers	80.00	50.00
Steward	40.00	30.00
Cook	35.00	26.50
8 sailors	200.00	a120.00
6 firemen	210.00	129.00
2 coal passers	60.00	43.00
Per month	1,140.00	764.00
Per year, difference		4,512.00

a Six sailors.

"The crew under the American flag was greater in numbers by two men than under the British flag.

"The registered tonnage of the merchant fleets of the several maritime nations of the world are as follows:

	Tons.
United States	873,000
Italy	1,180,000
France	1,480,000
Norway	1,660,000
Germany	2,960,000
British Empire	14,800,000

"The United States has developed the most marvelous foreign commerce of all the nations of the world. We are sending into other lands nearly $5,000,000 worth of American products and commodities every day; but it is a significant fact that American ships convey less than 9 per cent of our exports and imports. The tribute paid to foreign ships for conveying merchandise to and from the United States amounted to over $100,000,000 last year.

"An idea of the relation of the shipbuilding industry in the United States to that in Great Britain is given by the following figures for 1903: The United States launched 188 vessels of 493,144 tons; Great Britain launched 1,258 vessels of 1,409,630 tons.

"The total new construction for the Navy now under way is as follows: 38 vessels of all kinds, 354,214 tons; value, $88,284,516."

S. M. CULLOM,
F. E. WARREN,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,
FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. This is a final agreement.

The report was agreed to.

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will let the bill go over for the present, owing to the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. It will go over as the unfinished business.

ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Ohio withholds that motion for one moment. I move that the bill (H. R. 6289) to provide for the abatement of nuisances in the District of Columbia by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia. This is done because some very good people desire to have a further hearing on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New Hampshire is agreed to, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ROADS AND ROAD BUILDING.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to enable me to make a request?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Texas for that purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. There has been printed a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, Tuesday, January 26, 1904, a pamphlet consisting of about 115 pages, on the subject of roads and road building. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the hearing which he sends to the desk may be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the request made by the Senator from Texas, I ask that 1,000 additional copies of the document be printed and deposited in the document room of the Senate. There are a great many calls for it, I will say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that 1,000 additional copies of the document sent to the desk by the Senator from Texas be printed and deposited in the document room. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. It has been suggested to me that during the morning hour the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] made some request about publishing the document. I am not certain about it, but if it has already been ordered printed a further order is unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not informed of any such request. The Chair hears no objection. The order will stand as agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I am informed that this morning the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] reported from the Committee on Printing a resolution, which was passed, providing for the printing of 12,000 copies of the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture in reference to good roads. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the order subsequently offered by me for the same purpose was passed; so that only the 12,000 copies provided for by the resolution of the Senator from New York will be printed, as I believe that number is sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the vote by which the Senate on his motion ordered the printing of the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in regard to good roads may be reconsidered. In the absence of objection, the order is reconsidered.

SANITARY DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes to-morrow morning to close up the consideration of the milk bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I want just ten minutes in the morning hour.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield for that request to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the routine morning business?

Mr. KEAN. I am afraid that will interfere with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who is very much bent upon Alaskan legislation, to which the Senate has agreed to give to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. My request is for the morning hour. I ask that this time be given in the morning hour.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Indiana has the day, after the routine morning business, for Alaskan bills.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want more than five minutes, and I ask that that time be given immediately after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is unanimous consent already given that immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow the Alaskan bills shall be taken up for consideration.

Mr. STEWART. After the routine business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the routine morning business.

Mr. STEWART. Then I am closed out. I give notice, however, that if I am to be cut off in every direction there will be no more unanimous-consent agreements of that character.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Nevada gave notice an hour or more ago that he would like to have ten minutes for the bill he has in charge. I do not wish to cut him out if he can have a vote.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is not in his seat. If he were here, we could dispose of the bill now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will vouch that the Senator from Missouri will not object, if the Senator has reached an agreement with him.

Mr. STEWART. I have; but he has the amendments in his desk. If the Senator from Missouri can be found, and the pages can find him in a moment, we can dispose of the bill now.

Mr. FORAKER. I will do all I can to aid the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. I have sent for the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the Senator from Nevada wants me to withhold my motion for ten minutes.

Mr. STEWART. For only five minutes after the Senator from Missouri comes in.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator what bill he has reference to—the bill in regard to pure milk?

Mr. STEWART. The milk bill.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator does not hope to pass the bill in ten minutes?

Mr. STEWART. I do; and in less time, unless the Senator from Georgia wants to make a speech on it.

Mr. CLAY. I never want to make a speech; but I think Senators whose constituents will be affected by the bill will want to be heard upon it.

Mr. STEWART. No; the Senator from Missouri is the only one who was not satisfied, and I laid the bill aside for him to prepare amendments. He has prepared them, and I have agreed to them. He is going to offer the amendments, but he has stepped out of the Chamber; and I suppose we can not do it now.

Mr. KEAN. If there is nothing before the Senate——

Mr. FORAKER. My motion is before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. But the Senator is not going to move to go into executive session for ten minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. However, I do not want to lose my right to make the motion.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Missouri will be here in a minute.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to lose the floor. Let me inquire of the Senator what is the objection of the Senator from Missouri to the bill?

Mr. STEWART. There are some amendments which he wants to make. I have agreed to his amendments. He has been here all day, ready to let the bill pass in a moment. I am told he will be here in a minute or two, but I do not know whether he will or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no difficulty about the Senate going into executive session and then returning to legislative session.

Mr. FORAKER. We can return to legislative session later on, I suggest.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

Mr. FORAKER. I renew my motion, then.

Mr. COCKRELL entered the Chamber.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Missouri is here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 2402 may be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2402) to secure sanitary dairy products for the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move in section 1, on page 4, line 18 of the amendment, after the word "act," that the following words be inserted:

A board of milk inspection, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies herein provided for; and the said Commissioners shall, before the appointment of such board, appoint.

So that it will read:

That there shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act, a board of milk inspection, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies herein provided for, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think the language is unfortunate?

That there shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia—

A board, two of whom the Commissioners will scarcely appoint, will they?

Mr. COCKRELL. The health officer is appointed by the District Commissioners, and I thought I would not change the phraseology any more than was necessary. That was a small matter, already in the bill, and I wanted to make as few changes as possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. It occurred to me that the language employed would be hardly proper if the board of milk inspection is to be composed as the Senator proposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the suggestion is a good one; but I was anxious to adopt as many words as possible of my friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. GALLINGER. I knew that.

Mr. COCKRELL. All I want is to get in the main proposition.

Mr. STEWART. I hope we shall not consume time in a discussion about phraseology. Let us get the bill through.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest that it read:

A board of milk inspection is hereby created, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think myself that is better, and I will modify my amendment in that way. I will read it over.

A board of milk inspection is hereby created, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

That strikes out all down to and including the word "Columbia," in line 19, and then it will read:

A board of milk inspection is hereby created, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who shall be familiar with the dairy business.

Mr. GALLINGER. "And who shall possess."

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

And who shall possess a knowledge of analytical chemistry.

Then, after the word "and," in line 21, insert "said board of milk inspection;" in line 25, at the beginning of the line, strike out the words "superintendent of dairies" and insert "board of milk inspection;" after the word "chemist," in line 25, insert "and one bacteriologist;" then, in line 1, on page 5, after the word "under," strike out the word "his;" then, in line 2, after the word "direction," insert "of said board;" so as to read:

And shall, under direction of said board, perform such other duties relating to.

After the word "to," strike out "his" and insert "their;" so as to read: "relating to their profession." Then, on the same page, in line 6, s trike out the word "superintendent" and insert "said board."

Mr. GALLINGER. And strike out the word "the" before "superintendent."

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I want it to read: "of the said board." That leaves in the word "the." Then, in line 17, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, strike out "superintendent" and insert "said board;" then, at the end of line 21, insert "the superintendent of dairies shall have, under said board, charge of the inspection of milk and cream herein provided for, and he may, in his discretion, suspend any inspector and report the same to said board;" then, in line 24, after the words "per annum," insert "the bacteriologist, $1,800 per annum;" then, on page 6, line 4, after the words "in all," strike out "twenty-three thousand" and insert "twenty-four thousand eight hundred;" then, in line 9, after the words "authorized the," strike out the word "terms" and insert "offices."

In other words, instead of a superintendent of dairies having charge of everything, it is to be a board of milk inspection, composed of the health officer, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies. Then a bacteriologist is added. This board controls. The bacteriologist is to get a salary of $1,800 a year, and the total amount is increased by that sum. Those are the only changes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the first section of the substitute as it will stand if the amendments proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] are agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

That a board of milk inspection is hereby created, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who shall be familiar with the dairy business, and who shall possess a knowledge of analytical chemistry, and said board of milk inspection, who shall be charged with the enforcement of all laws relating to the production and sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia.

There shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the board of milk inspection, one analytical chemist and one bacteriologist, who shall assist the superintendent of dairies and shall, under direction of said board, perform such other duties relating to their profession as may be required by the health officer of the District of Columbia, one clerk, and one skilled laborer. And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, six inspectors, who shall be qualified veterinary surgeons, who have been graduated after a proper period of study by a school of veterinary medicine authorized by law to confer the degree of doctor of veterinary medicine or some similar degree, whose duty it shall be to inspect all places and dairy farms where milk is produced for sale in the District of Columbia. No person, firm, or corporation refusing to such inspectors free access to the premises to be inspected shall bring any milk or cream into the District of Columbia. And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, eight inspectors, who shall be experienced in the dairy business and whose duty it shall be to inspect all milk and cream brought into the District of Columbia for sale, and also to inspect all places within the District from which milk or cream is sold.

The superintendent of dairies shall have, under said board, charge of the inspection of milk and cream herein provided for, and he may, in his discretion, suspend any inspector and report the same to said board. The superintendent of dairies shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum; the analytical chemist, $2,400 per annum; the bacteriologist, $1,800 per annum; the veterinary inspectors of farms and places where milk is produced, $1,300 per annum each; the inspectors and the clerk, $1,000 per annum each; and the skilled laborer, $900 per annum: in all, $24,800, which sum is hereby appropriated, one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and from and after the appointment by the said Commissioners of the inspectors herein authorized the offices of such inspectors as are now provided for by law for the enforcement of the laws relating to the production and sale of milk in the District of Columbia shall cease and determine.

It shall be the duty of the officers herein provided for to execute the provisions of this act and all laws and regulations relating to the production and sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia, and for that purpose shall at all times have access to farms and other places where milk or cream is produced, to dairies from which milk or cream is sold, and to wagons or other vehicles used in the business of distributing milk or cream. And the superintendent of dairies may suspend the permit of any person who obstructs free access to the officers herein named at any hour of the day or night to his premises or property used in the business of producing milk or cream to be sold in the District of Columbia or of selling milk or cream in said District.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia in the nature of a substitute as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEAD TAX ON CITIZENS OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk.

The bill (H. R. 11443) to extend the exemption from head tax to citizens of Newfoundland entering the United States was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1, chapter 1012, of the Statutes at Large of the United States of America (57th Cong., 2d sess.), is hereby amended by inserting in line 4, after the word "Canada," the word "Newfoundland;" so as to read as follows:

"That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $2 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico, who shall come by steam, sail, or other vessel from any foreign port to any port within the United States, or by any railway or any other mode of transportation from foreign contiguous territory to the United States. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien passenger shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of every such vessel or transportation line. The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury and shall constitute a permanent appropriation, to be called the 'immigrant fund,' to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury to defray the expense of regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States under this act, including the cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and the salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act.

The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessels which shall bring such aliens to ports of the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels, and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. The head tax herein provided for shall not be levied upon aliens in transit through the United States nor upon aliens who have once been admitted into the United States and have paid the head tax who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 32 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the duty imposed by this section upon aliens seeking admission overland, either as to all or as to any such aliens.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, owing to the confusion, it has been impossible for me to understand the bill as read.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to hear some explanation of this matter, reserving the right to object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to reserve the right to object. I want to know what this bill is. It strikes me as a very strange bill to come here under unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The only change which this bill makes in the existing statutes is the insertion of the word "Newfoundland" between the words "Dominion of Canada" and the words "Republics of Cuba and Mexico." The reason for this change is this: The committee last year probably did not realize that Newfoundland is not a part of the Dominion of Canada. The purpose of the previous legislation was to exempt from the head tax——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to object to this bill without knowing what it is; but I should be glad to hear the gentleman's statement so that I may understand the matter.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will explain again that this bill proposes to amend the immigration law which passed last year. That bill imposed a head tax of $2 on everyone coming to the United States, except those coming from contiguous territory. It exempted citizens of the Dominion of Canada and the Republics of Cuba and Mexico, but, probably by mistake, did not exempt citizens visiting us from Newfoundland, because most people did not realize that Newfoundland is not a part of the Dominion of Canada. The result has been that people coming down from Newfoundland to do business in Boston and elsewhere in our New England fishing towns have been much annoyed by the imposition of this head tax of $2, from which it was intended to exempt all people traveling on business from contiguous territory.

I will say that I have resolutions from the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and I present a letter from the Commissioner-General of Immigration, Mr. Sargent, saying that there is no objection to this bill. The committee is unanimously in favor of it.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the only change in the existing law?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The only change is the insertion of the word "Newfoundland" between the words "Dominion of Canada" and the words "Republics of Cuba and Mexico."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I should like to ask if tourists coming to this country are compelled to pay that two-dollar tax?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I understand such to be the case, except those who come from Canada, Cuba, and Mexico; but for the gentleman's information I will tell him that I believe there is a great deal of controversy about that question as to just what is the meaning of the words "in transit" in the immigration law. That is entirely apart from the subject-matter of this bill, however. The question with regard to just what the words "in transit" mean has not yet been definitely determined; whether a tourist returning by the same route is in transit or not is a matter now under discussion with the Commissioner of Immigration. But all this has no reference to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. COWHERD. I understand that; but what I wanted to call to the attention of the gentleman and the committee is this: I am informed that tourists, especially those landing on the Pacific coast at Vancouver and other places, who desire to go through the United States and who would patronize our railroads are compelled to pay this additional tax and to submit to certain inconveniences, with the result that the traffic goes to the Canadian roads. I think that condition ought to be remedied.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I understand the difficulty which the gentleman alludes to, but it is apart from the subject-matter of this bill. I know there is that difficulty, and it is claimed in my part of the country also that it diverts traffic; but that has nothing to do with the subject-matter of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, there has been so much disorder——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BAKER. There has been so much noise that it has been impossible to hear the gentleman's explanation, and I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the immigration and naturalization act passed last year. The amendment proposes to insert the word "Newfoundland" between the words "Dominion of Canada" and the words "Republics of Cuba and Mexico." Citizens coming from Mexico, Cuba, and Canada are not required to pay the head tax at present. People coming from Newfoundland to do their shopping in Boston are compelled, owing to an accidental omission in the law, to pay that head tax of $2, most people last year not realizing that Newfoundland was no part of the Dominion of Canada.

The Commissioner-General of Immigration, in a letter which I have, says that he has no objection to the amendment. It is a matter which is simply a source of irritation to people doing their shopping in Boston and transacting their fishing business in the New England towns like Gloucester.

Mr. BAKER. I understand this does not affect the general immigration law.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. This does not affect the general immigration law in the slightest. It only extends to Newfoundland the exception that now exists for the Dominion of Canada.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Easby-Smith, including biographies of all the Attorneys-General and Solicitors-General; and that there also be printed from plates etched or engraved by Max and Albert Rosenthal, and inserted in said history, portraits of the Attorneys-General and Solicitors-General; and that in addition to said usual number there be printed and bound in cloth 100 copies for the Department of Justice.

LICENSING OF CUSTOM-HOUSE BROKERS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13416) providing for the licensing of custom-house brokers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the collector or chief officer of the customs at any port of entry or delivery shall issue a license to any reputable and competent person desiring to transact business as a custom-house broker or agent of importers: Provided, That such license may be revoked for reasonable cause at any time by the Secretary of the Treasury after a reasonable notice and hearing has been given: And provided further, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1904, no person shall transact business as a custom-house broker or agent of importers without a license granted in accordance with this provision; but this act shall not be so construed as to prohibit any importer from transacting business in person at a custom-house pertaining to his own importations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask my colleague to withhold the objection for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am perfectly willing to withhold it until the gentleman makes an explanation, but I certainly shall insist upon the objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I think if my colleague was informed on the subject he would not object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be possible; I have some information on it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means unanimously after a hearing both of the Secretary of the Treasury and a committee who came here from the custom-house brokers in the city of New York. The brokers objected to the bill as originally drawn and presented before the committee. After they had been heard the bill was amended and this substitute introduced and reported to meet all the objections of the brokers, so that the bill in its present form has the indorsement both of the Treasury Department and of this committee of custom-house brokers who came here in the first place to oppose the original bill. I hope my colleague will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that a great many persons residing in my district have written to me in reference to the proposed legislation, and I should prefer an opportunity to look into the matter before giving my consent. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw the bill to-day, in order that we may have an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly, if the gentleman desires to look into it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill was only brought in a day or two ago.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] is recognized.

LEASES OF POST-OFFICES, PREMISES, ETC.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, what I understand as the regular order for to-day is the so-called "Hay resolution" agreement upon which for three hours of general debate was made of record on last Monday. In view of the demand of Members for time for debate, I am constrained to ask unanimous consent—and I do so after consultation with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle—for a postponement until Monday next of the consideration, which I will say frankly would result in the debate on the post-office bill, which would afford more latitude of debate than really would be afforded under the special order. Therefore I have now asked for unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will couple with his request also the request for unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended, so that instead of an hour and a half on each side we have two hours and a half, it would be well to do that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am quite content to do that, and ask that the time shall be five hours; the time to be controlled——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To take it up on Monday after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. OVERSTREET. To be controlled the same as has already been agreed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the special order go over until Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that there be five hours of general debate instead of three. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any reason why the debate shall not go on to-day, with two hours and a half on a side. Therefore I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order, which I assume is now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And I move that the order be postponed until immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next, at which time it shall be debated for five hours instead of three hours, the time to be controlled equally by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not proceed except by unanimous consent. To-day was the day fixed, immediately after the reading of the Journal, to consider the resolution which is now before the House, as I understand it, and without unanimous consent that order can not now be changed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a motion to postpone to a day certain the consideration of the resolution, free from the motion to enlarge the time for debate, is in order. It is for the House to determine what order of business it will consider.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then, Mr. Speaker, I give notice that should the motion prevail——

Mr. HAY. I object, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman indulging in any debate. I think the gentleman must make his motion without debate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the special order be postponed until Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, at which time I shall ask consent for a longer period of general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Monday next.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is there any opportunity of debate on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not yielded the floor, except for a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. My attention was called by some Member making an inquiry, and I had not completed my motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is debatable only as to the desirability of postponing the consideration of the resolution until Monday next, and the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, my object in rising was very largely in proceeding to make such a motion, in view of the limited time which had originally been fixed for debate, and in view also of the condition, the parliamentary condition, of the House which permits the post-office appropriation bill, with general debate, to be considered at this time, that it would afford the House a latitude in debate upon this resolution that could not obtain under the restriction of the special order.

I believe that many Members who question seriously the wisdom of the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, or those who do not feel clear in their opinion, with myself, would generally look upon that with favor. If we proceed now with the regular order, and if those Members who are opposed to my position should prevail in their efforts to refuse to lay the resolution on the table, then the resolution would be before the House without any proper determination in the minds of many of the Members what further proceedings they would desire to take. I say that in all fairness to Members who do not favor the motion to table, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the postponing of this regular order would enable Members not only to discuss the resolution in the general debate on the post-office appropriation bill, but enable them further to determine more satisfactorily to themselves just what procedure they would desire in the event of their own preference.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana, if his motion prevails, if it does not operate to take the subject-matter of the pending motion out of our hands until Monday next?

Mr. OVERSTEET. Oh, the gentleman thoroughly understands the latitude in general debate upon appropriation bills.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It is equivalent to placing this motion upon the table, is it not?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, I think not. I will say to my friend it will operate to postpone the vote upon the resolution until there has been more general debate upon the subject.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. So that anything that is said by any Member upon the floor is said just as it would be said in Committee of the Whole, and without any power to deal with the resolution whatever?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no; the gentleman understands, I think, fully the latitude in general debate. It gives opportunity to Members to express themselves without going——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And Members must be content to print their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And it would give us until Monday for general debate in addition to the time to be given on Monday before the vote is taken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to make the proposition, if I rightly understood him, that if this motion is agreed to he will at once move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, at which time gentlemen who were prepared to talk this morning may possibly, if they can get permission——

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is exactly my notion; and if I could have had my way I should have asked that the gentleman from Ohio be given the floor after the committee had taken charge of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Ohio will seek the floor at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And the gentleman from Indiana will be very glad to yield the floor to him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I quite agree, then, with the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is right.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that there is a great deal of confusion in the minds of gentlemen because of the form and character in which propositions are presented to the House. Now, I understand that we have, in a formal way, only one proposition. In an informal way we have a second one. The formal proposition is to be found in the report that was made by the Post-Office Committee upon the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], that resolution contemplating, if I read it correctly, an investigation as to certain matters that were referred to in the report made by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General some weeks ago. That report also embodies all of the testimony, as I understand, that is to be found in the Post-Office Department bearing upon those particular matters referred to in that resolution of the gentleman from Virginia.

Now, the committee, as I further understand, have unanimously reported favoring the laying of those resolutions on the table, and conclude their report in this language: "Believing that no investigation would elicit further facts than herein set out, your committee recommends that the resolution referred to do lie upon the table." I understand further there is no minority report, and therefore the report is a unanimous finding of the whole committee upon this matter that is now formally before the House. Therefore, I take it, the gentlemen upon the committee, including the minority, without they propose their own stultification, will vote to lay that resolution on the table.

But the difficulty is presented by another report upon another subject (not now before the House for consideration) made by the minority of the Post-Office Committee, and that is found in the recommendations that are signed by Messrs. JOHN A. MOON, J. M. GRIGGS, W. S. COWHERD, D. E. FINLEY, and THEODORE F. KLUTTZ, in which they recommend not an investigation as directed or contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, but an entirely different character of investigation—broader, more full, and in such a manner as could not be had under the resolution that is now before us. There is, therefore, but one formal proposition now before the House, and that is embodied in the recommendation of the whole committee that the subject do lie upon the table. I undertake to say that when that is disposed of at a later time in the proper manner by a formal resolution, the gentlemen of the minority will strive to bring this subject before the attention of the House in a way that at least will be satisfactory to them.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly, if the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman is quoting from this report that no investigation would elicit further facts than are herein set out. I am prepared to say that an investigation would elicit further facts respecting Members of the House, absolving Members from criticism, and that these facts have been suppressed. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well; that is a subject I have no knowledge of. But I undertake to say that the situation will be met by these opponents of ours when the time comes, when they embody the allegations that are found in this document, the minority report upon the post-office appropriation bill, that are entirely distinct from the subject-matter before the House, I imagine that they know what they are about and that they will give the gentleman the opportunity to get out that alleged suppressed information.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. We ought to have that opportunity on this side.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, we ought to have it on this side; but I undertake to say that there is not a Member of this House that desires to screen anybody in this matter. I for one want to go to the very bottom of it. If there is crime, I want the crime punished. We have shown our purpose; we have shown our willingness. Where has there ever been a time when the authority of this Government has been so strenuously asserted to bring criminals to justice as there has been in relation to this matter? That is an earnest of what this House will do when the time comes to act, and therefore I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is but little difficulty about this; that we can very well follow the lead of our Democratic brethren, who advise to lay on the table the only matter that is now properly pending before this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much attention, as I always do, to the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa is right about one thing; we on this side do want to go further. The gentleman is right; we want the corruption in the Post-Office Department investigated—not by the friends of the men who have been guilty of the corruption, but by the House of Representatives. [Applause.] By a committee of the House of Representatives. The gentleman is wrong, in another respect, when he says that from all appearances before him we are going to be given an opportunity to do that. We are going to be given the opportunity under the agreement to offer an amendment, or a substitute, involving a general investigation, but the chairman of the Post-Office Committee has reserved the right to make a point of order against the proposition. If neither he nor anybody else on that side makes the point of order, then we will have the opportunity to investigate the well-known and partially ventilated frauds in the Post-Office Department by a committee of this House, to be selected by the Speaker of this House, in whom every one of us has absolute confidence. [Applause.]

I had not thought, Mr. Speaker, to say a word on this subject to-day. I had not thought of participating in the debate. Now, as far as the resolution investigating Members of Congress is concerned, the matter of privilege, on which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] was recognized, it may be true, as the committee thinks, that they have elicited all the information they could elicit. It may be true, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] seems to think, that all the information to be elicited has not been elicited. But that does not touch the broader question of the duty before this House, viz, the right of this House to investigate fraud in the Post-Office Department, and it does not touch this question that somebody at the Post-Office Department has somehow included in a report the name of man after man in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, guilty of not even apparent wrong, guilty of no technical violation of law even, guilty of no moral obliquity, guilty of nothing that bears upon or even touches upon criminality. What was the motive of it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. To muddy the waters.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes. What was the motive? Was it not to give Congress notice that the Department had something held over Congress—that Congress had better let the Department alone? [Applause.]

Now, are you going to meet it or are you going to lie down under it? Is the gentleman at the proper time going to make the point of order and make it in the name of his party, or is he going to fail to make it and let the House vote upon the question of a general investigation? Are you going to be permitted under the rules of this body to have a standing committee, or the present standing Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, examine into the corruptions in the Post-Office Department, to examine into them not from the standpoint of gentlemen in the Post-Office Department, intertwined, as they necessarily are, with one another upon lines of personal friendship and political affiliation, but by an outside body standing above them and beyond them and aloof from them, capable of being impartial, capable of running the auger down to where it strikes water?

Now, gentlemen of the House, the Post-Office Department has put 150 of you upon a list, and sent your names out to the newspapers of the country under a heading of "Men charged with violations and irregularities"—charged with what the people understand to be criminality. There are not upon that list over six cases of violations of even technical law; but the names of the balance of you, not guilty even technically of anything, have been handed in with the others and appear here under this resolution. Now, is it time for you to examine them?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to correct the gentleman from Mississippi, if he will give me the opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman said a moment ago, without quoting what I said, that I believed some facts had been suppressed. What I said, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, was this: He quoted from the conclusions in this report on page 3, where it says, "No investigation would elicit further facts than herein set forth." I said that to my own knowledge there had been suppressed facts which, if elicited, would relieve the Member charged of any criticism whatever. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I accept the gentleman's correction, of course. I did not hear the gentleman make that addition. I thought he meant that facts had been suppressed that carried with them criminality. Understanding the matter as he states, of course he can have no objection to laying the motion upon the table so far as concerns Members.

But I was leaving that question out of what I wanted to discuss and was merely trying to outline the two views upon it and leave it wherever it might happen to fall. I wish to urge an investigation of the Post-Office Department by this House. That is what I want done.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the question before the House is whether or not the House will postpone the consideration of this resolution for five or six more days. I can see no purpose and no reason why the consideration of this resolution should be postponed. Every fact (so the Post-Office Committee tells us) which can be elicited has been put before this House. Two days have been given in which gentlemen could ascertain the facts in their own cases. The Members of this House owe it to themselves to have this matter settled as soon as possible.

And I do not altogether agree with my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I believe there ought to be an investigation of the Post-Office Department; but I believe that along with that investigation there ought to be also an investigation of these charges. We ought not to eliminate the investigation of ourselves, which has been asked, in order to get an investigation of the Post-Office Department. Let us have both, and let us have it as soon as possible. I hope that the motion to postpone will be voted down. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what warrant the gentleman from Mississippi has for entertaining a suspicion that a fair investigation of all proper matters will not be had by this House. I want to call his attention to what has already been done. The gentleman from Virginia introduced a resolution, with various preambles, as follows;

The House having under consideration the following resolution:

Whereas Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General J. L. Bristow, in his report to the Postmaster-General, dated October 24, 1903, and which report has been transmitted to a committee of this House, has charged that "long-time leases for post-office premises were canceled and the rent increased upon the recommendation of influential Representatives;" and

Whereas it is charged in the same report that "if a Member of Congress requested an increase in the clerk hire allowed a postmaster Beavers usually complied, regardless of the merits of the case;" and

Whereas certain cases of an aggravated character are cited on pages 133, 134, and 135 of said report to sustain the above charges; and

Whereas on page 145 of said report it is charged that Members of Congress have violated section 3739 of the Revised Statutes, and that "in the face of this statute Beavers has made contracts with Members of Congress for the rental of premises, either in their own names, the names of their agents, or some member of their family;" and

Whereas these charges and others contained in said report reflect upon the integrity of the membership of this House, and upon individual Members of this House whose names are not mentioned: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of this House, to investigate said charges; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer, and to have power to sit during the sessions of the House, and to exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of said charges, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

Mr. Speaker, that resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. That committee, in pursuance of their duty, addressed to Hon. Henry C. Payne, Postmaster-General, this letter:

SIR: I have the honor to request that there be furnished direct to this committee, by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, all information which can be communicated by such official with reference to allowances for clerk hire in offices where those allowances have been discontinued, together with all information relating to leases which have been made to Members of Congress, and whether discontinued and renewed at a higher rate.

Now, that was the call. It called for the information that was the basis of these alleged charges by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. That information has been furnished. The committee had it before them. The committee have examined it and the committee arrived at the conclusion that, believing no investigation would elicit further facts than are herein stated—

Your committee recommend that the resolution referred to do lie upon the table.

And upon the strength of that testimony that is sent here the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] acquits every Member of this House referred to in that long list, the proofs of which furnish the basis of these charges, of all criminality and improper conduct, and only suggests impropriety with regard to half a dozen Members.

Therefore there has been a complete investigation of these matters that are referred to in this resolution, and the committee themselves, acting upon the proofs that they have secured, have found the erroneousness of these various whereases, and have, therefore, with unanimity, recommended that the subject embodied in the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, as one of the Members under indictment [laughter] I desire to say a word on the motion of the gentleman fron Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] to postpone the vote on the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. Speaker, the Post-Office Department is a business department of the Government. They deal with matters of pure business up there and with nothing else. They buy supplies, they rent buildings, they hire employees, they receive and disburse money. No Member of the House of Representatives, no member of the Senate of the United States, ought to have any relations with that purely business Department upon which he is not willing to have shed the light at any moment without a moment's notice. [Applause.]

No Member of the House of Representatives whose name is in this list, as my name is, coupled with that of A. W. Machen, whom the country and the world knows to be a convicted felon on his way to the penitentiary, has a right to stand up in the House of Representatives and ask for a moment's delay upon this resolution [applause] or for a moment's delay in the investigation of the charges against himself. Who knows better than I do whether I am guilty? If I am guilty, I want delay always. [Applause.] If I am guilty, I can never have too long a delay. I would rather there would never be a hearing if I am guilty. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] sought to inject politics into this. I thought he tried to line us up upon this side by suggesting that possibly some gentleman on the other side of the Chamber would introduce a resolution to investigate everybody and everything connected with the Post-Office Department—a dragnet resolution. That is not the resolution reported by the Committee on Postal Affairs. That committee struck out the words "or other irregularities," which were in the original resolution.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That committee did nothing of the kind, and I know the gentleman does not care to make a misstatement.

That part which is stricken out was stricken out by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On a point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly. The committee reported back——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The words that were stricken out——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Were stricken out in the House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I know the gentleman from Indiana does not want to misrepresent me, but he has done it twice now. He says that those words were stricken out by me. They were stricken out, as the gentleman knows, upon a point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. OVERSTREET. But the gentleman, as the RECORD will show, offered the resolution anew with the words stricken out.

Mr. HAY. Of course I did; otherwise I could not have had it considered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, is this to come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Several MEMBERS. Ask an extension of time, then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa thought to line us up on this side by suggesting something which might be introduced on the other side. There was applause on that side at that, and I thought I heard mutterings if not words of approval upon this side at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa. Why, there is no politics in this. The Republican party has never in its platform, neither has the Democratic party in its platform, suggested that graft in the Post-Office Department was legitimate.

There is nothing in the platform of either party which countenances dishonesty in executive officers. There is no possible way to make politics out of this. The chief criminal convicted was a Democratic appointee, and another man whom we expect to see follow him on the same road is a Republican. There is no possible political capital to be made out of it, because one of the most honest men that this country ever saw in public place is the President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, and he has directed these prosecutions of men in his own party from the very inception of that investigation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And has employed Democrats to do it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, has employed Democrats to superintend the prosecution.

I have heard a word said here by some of my friends on this side that Mr. Bristow was to blame for the report which comes in here at the hands of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads had submitted to them a specific resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman from Wisconsin does not desire any further time, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] five minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, have we any time in our own right on this side or not?

The SPEAKER. Not until the hour of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I shall be glad to give further time if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well.

Mr. Speaker, the statements made upon this floor by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] indicate very clearly a misunderstanding of the situation of the measure before the House.

It will be remembered that the Postmaster-General in his report, made by Mr. Bristow, the Fourth Assistant, charged the membership of this House with improper conduct and violation of law. Thereafter the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] presented a resolution to this House asking for an investigation of the membership and a general investigation of the Department. It was properly held that there was matter in the resolution that was not of a privileged character. The House, under the ruling of the Speaker, finally submitted for consideration to the Post-Office Department a strictly privileged resolution. The scope and authority conferred in that resolution was an inquiry into the propriety of the consideration of the conduct of Members of the House in connection with the Post-Office Department. That committee had no power to go further than an inquiry of that sort. It had no power to make an investigation of its own. It could and did obtain the facts merely to meet the question submitted by the committee to the House.

Upon the submission of the charges made by the Department against the membership of this House, the committee felt it unnecessary, in view of the character of those charges, to proceed further in order to enable it to make a proper report, under the resolution, to the House. The committee was of the opinion that the law had been violated in a few instances; that Members of Congress in making pressure upon the Department had produced a violation of the regulations of the Department which have the force and effect of law in a number of instances. But inasmuch as none of the acts of the Members of the House involve moral turpitude of any character, the committee were of the opinion that it should present to this House the statement as made in this report in connection with this matter, and thus submit the facts to the House in its possession. It could not do less in the public interest.

It depends upon how the House looks at these facts as to the conclusion that ought to be reached. It was impossible for us to prophesy what the judgment of this House would be. The judgment of the committee was that the membership of the House, in view of all the charges made, were not guilty of acts that required investigation. In other words, the charges made by the Department against the membership of this House, except in very few instances, upon their face show that an investigation is not proper against the membership of this House; that they have done nothing that will authorize this body to inquire into their conduct further in connection with the Department. If the Department, in making the charges in the first place, are not able to present a state of facts that will justify the committee in saying that there ought to be further investigation, then what must be done with the resolution? There is but one course to be pursued about the resolution under such facts. It is to recommend that it lie on the table.

The gentleman from Iowa complains that the minority of the committee in another bill—the post-office appropriation bill—has recommended to this House a general investigation. I will say to the gentleman and to the House that his position is correct; that we do recommend a general investigation, and we do so in the post-office appropriation bill report, for the simple reason that we can not make such a recommendation upon a resolution of inquiry to investigate the membership of the House that was strictly privileged in its character. The resolution of inquiry that we propose is not privileged in its character, and therefore it can not properly come as a minority recommendation on a resolution to investigate the membership of the House, which is privileged. But while that is true——

Mr. COWHERD. My friend will remember that the minority proposed in committee a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The minority of the committee realizing from the facts that had been developed in the general investigation and the proof that was before the committee required an investigation of the Post-Office Department in order to lay the ground for the action which will be sought to be taken under this resolution, in committee offered a resolution as a substitute or as an amendment for this, for the purpose of presenting the question to this House. There is, although this be a privileged resolution, but one thing in the way of an honest investigation of the Post-Office Department, and that is the objection on the part of the majority of this House, by the interposition of a point of order. [Applause.] There is no inconsistency in the two resolutions coming from the committee on the bill and resolution.

The facts have been presented by the minority with a double view. We propose to offer you an opportunity for an investigation under this resolution if in the interest of honor, of truth, and justice you are willing to waive the point of order behind which you stand to be protected as a shield against investigation. [Applause.] Yield that point, and all is well; the investigation can proceed; and if any gentleman thinks he ought to make further defense to the charges made by the Department, the way will be open for his defense. If, Mr. Speaker, the point of order shall be interposed; if this House, by its majority, shall prevent an investigation under this resolution, then the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—I mean the majority of the committee—are standing ready with another proposition, in the shape of a minority resolution, and will ask for an appropriation of money in the post-office bill to have a committee appointed by the Speaker of this House in that measure to investigate this Department. In other words, we are determined that if there be no investigation of these frauds—these thieves being yours, and not ours—that you shall have the responsibility of their protection and not the Democratic party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the proposition before the House is the question as to whether or not we shall postpone a matter that involves the honor of a large number of the Members of this House.

The gentleman from Indiana gives as his reason why this question should not be considered now, why the membership of this House should not now have an opportunity to answer to the country the charges that have been made against them, that there is a post-office bill pending, and that we can not spare the time from the consideration of a general post-office appropriation bill to consider a question that involves the character and honor of this House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that whatever may be the outcome of this matter, that whatever position this House may take as to whether it will lay this resolution on the table or not, it is not a question that will bear postponement. The House of Representatives of the United States was once a great parliamentary body. Has it come so low that a subordinate officer of this Government may charge the membership of this House with high crimes and misdemeanors, wipe his feet on the membership of this House, and we must postpone our answer and the consideration of those charges, forsooth, because we have pending before us an appropriation bill, and that should first pass?

The gentleman from Indiana says that he has not the time to grant additional time to the membership of this House to answer these charges now; that he can not give more than an hour and a half to a side to-day, but if we let it go over until Monday he is willing to give two hours and a half to a side. I say that when a charge comes before this House involving the membership of this House the question of time should not be one that should be considered at all. I say that if the gentleman from Indiana does his duty to this House and the Members of the House he will present his resolution and let the time run on in unlimited debate until every colleague of his here who has been unjustly accused has an opportunity to answer those charges before the bar of this House. No man who is innocent is afraid to face such charges as these, and if a man is guilty he should be required to face them before the bar of the House.

There is no man who has read this report who does not know that scores of his colleagues here on the floor have been unjustly and unfairly maligned by one of the great Departments of this Government. Under those circumstances are we to run away from the situation; are we to say to the country that we are not prepared to discuss the question now; that we must, forsooth, hurry up for a few days an appropriation bill? I say, No! I say, there is no matter of more importance that can come before the House of Representatives than one that involves the integrity of the membership of the House, and we should show the country that we are prepared to take it up and discuss it and investigate it now—not to-morrow or next week or next month, but now.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] five minutes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the time having arrived as set by the House for the disposition of this question, I hope we are going ahead and dispose of it, and not leave it until next Monday, unless some gentleman is prepared to give some good and substantial reason why that should be done. [Applause.] I do not expect, when I take my part in this question, to accept time from anybody. [Applause.] I propose to rise in my place and on the score of the highest personal privilege make my remarks. I do not care whether it is to-day or Monday. Now, if any gentleman can give any good and substantial reason why we should postpone it I am ready to vote to postpone; without such reason I am ready in a dignified way to proceed to the business at hand. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana and others that the report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, recommending no further investigation is necessary, is unanimous and shows that no further investigation is necessary. On that point I wish to state that when this matter was under consideration we had before us the report from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, or the Postmaster-General, I may say, consisting of more than a thousand pages and giving what purported to be full answers to a letter written by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the Postmaster-General asking for information and all facts relative to the cases where Members of Congress had secured improper allowances for clerk hire in the matter of separating mail, and also where Members of Congress had used their influence in securing the cancellation of long-time leases for post-office premises and new leases at increased rentals. Mr. Speaker, that was the state of facts at the time we made that report; and I wish to say now that we took the statement that this was full and all that could be given to be true.

Since that time I have made some investigation, and I find that the report brought to this House does not show all the facts in connection with the cases where an allowance was made for clerk hire in separating the mail and where long-time leases for post-offices were canceled and the rentals were increased. I wish to say that I shall not vote for the report of the committee. I shall vote against it. I believe that when the integrity of the Members of this House is assailed, and charges are made against them, that there should be a full and fair investigation. The facts should be brought here that will answer fully and completely each and every charge made, whether true or false, and I for one say that if there is a single charge affecting me or my course in this matter I want all the facts brought out. In many instances the report is garbled and incomplete.

I know of my own knowledge one case in particular where the facts as given in the report to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, included in the report to the House, do not state all the facts. I know of cases where facts are suppressed and where, if the real facts were given, there would not have been any necessity of including any mention of the Member or of the post-office where it is claimed an unusual and extraordinary allowance was made for clerk hire in separating the mail, or for the increase of rental. So, Mr. Speaker, standing here and speaking for myself, I say that I want an investigation by the House, and I think that the Members of this House are entitled to it. [Applause.] I think no delay is necessary. I believe that when a question like this is before the House the earliest opportunity for consideration should be taken advantage of, and I shall vote for an immediate consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I now withdraw my motion to postpone, having gained about one hour for debate for the benefit of the House. I understand that now, under the order of the House, there are three hours for debate, an hour and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and an hour and a half by myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, would it not be in order to ask unanimous consent to extend the time on both sides? I do not want to do it myself, and I will ask the gentleman from Indiana if he will not do it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me state to the gentleman from Mississippi that I have no disposition to put any special restrictions on the debate; but when I asked the consideration of a motion to postpone, it gave me an hour, under the rule, that I could distribute. I have endeavored to be courteous to both sides, and I have reached a point now where nobody wants the floor. Possibly at the end of three hours we may find that nobody then wants the floor. I think we can let the debate run on for the present. I tried to be fair with the House, and if there appears to be a proper demand for an extension at the end of three hours unanimous consent can be asked at that time. I think it would be well not to make it now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then later on, possibly, the request may be made.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would not each Member of the House of Representatives whose name appears in this report be entitled to address the House as a matter of personal privilege, in view of the heading of the pages of the report "Charges concerning Members of Congress?"

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say, in answer to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman, that that matter will be ruled upon when it arises. In the opinion of the Chair it is not in order at this time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit a suggestion?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am going to make a request for unanimous consent, which will perhaps comply with the gentleman's views. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may proceed on the report and resolution until 5 o'clock, the time to be equally divided, and to be under the control of the gentleman from Tennessee and myself, and that to-morrow immediately upon the reading of the Journal, a vote be taken to lay on the table.

Mr. BURLESON. Why not vote to-day?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Five o'clock is pretty late.

Mr. BURLESON. I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the resolution reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General J. L. Bristow, in his report to the Postmaster-General dated October 24, 1903, and which report has been transmitted to a committee of this House, has charged that "long-time leases for post-office premises were canceled and the rent increased upon the recommendation of influential Representatives;" and

Whereas it is charged in the same report that "if a Member of Congress requested an increase in the clerk hire allowed a postmaster Beavers usually complied, regardless of the merits of the case;" and

Whereas certain cases of an aggravated character are cited on pages 133, 134, and 135 of said report to sustain the above charges; and

Whereas on page 145 of said report it is charged that Members of Congress have violated section 3739 of the Revised Statutes, and that "in the face of this statute Beavers has made contracts with Members of Congress for the rental of premises, either in their own names, the names of their agents, or some member of their families;" and

Whereas these charges and others contained in said report reflect upon the integrity of the membership of this House, and upon individual Members of this House whose names are not mentioned: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of this House, to investigate said charges, and in connection therewith any frauds or irregularities in the conduct of the Post-Office Department; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer, and to have power to sit during the sessions of the House, and to exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of said charges, frauds, and irregularities, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

In lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "and in connection therewith any frauds or irregularities in the conduct of the Post-Office Department."

In line 10 strike out "frauds, and irregularities."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, in order that we may economize the time, I request that for a while there shall be no interruption.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask if the situation is not this: That by unanimous consent debate is to proceed, and then there will come up before the House the motion to lay on the table: that the vote immediately after the conclusion of the debate will not be on the resolution, but on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to lay that on the table?

The SPEAKER. Yes, if the gentleman makes the motion.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood that was the agreement day before yesterday.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is the report, that the resolution lie on the table, and naturally at the conclusion of general debate that motion will be made.

The SPEAKER. The special order requires that at the end of three hours' debate the vote shall be taken upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. COWHERD. There was in addition an agreement that the minority might offer another resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is included in the special order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be entirely respectful to Members, but in view of the running debate which has just passed and for the purpose of economizing time, I request that I may not be interrupted until an explanation of the report by me may be made.

Mr. Speaker, there is no intention on my part, nor do I deem it at all necessary, to enter upon any discussion of the Bristow report itself, which has heretofore been made public. The story of that investigation and of the fact that it was inaugurated and conducted by the Department itself and upon its own motion is now not only history, but familiar to all the citizens of this Republic. Whatever may have been the result of that investigation—how many officials or nonofficials were found to have violated the statutes under which they were properly indicted—nevertheless, neither that investigation itself nor the prosecution of those indictments has changed the usual order and channel of recommendations of Members of Congress who seek to obtain consideration of requests made by their constituents. These recommendations, under the natural order of things as well as the regulations of the Department, necessarily pursue the same channel of consideration which obtained in the Department prior to the investigation. Necessarily and naturally those recommendations at once went to the same divisions controlled by the gentlemen who may have been either indicted or summarily removed.

The mere fact that a Member of the House had made a recommendation upon a proper request from one of his constituency, which took it to that division, would put no imputation upon him or his acts, simply because some officer who had been employed in that division had been guilty of either malfeasance or misfeasance in office, whether he had been merely removed or indicted and convicted upon his trial.

I suggest this for the reason that naturally the investigation itself, conducted under the direction of the Department itself, brought under the notice of the officers conducting that investigation all of the recommendations of the Members of the House, which naturally had followed the channel of inquiry into those divisions which were under investigation. Such practice has obtained since the foundation of that Department. Such practice must obtain so long as that Department shall be one of the great divisions of the Government.

The investigation of these divisions of the Department (whatever may be the criticism in connection with it) has resulted in the concrete fact of indictments, which have been relentlessly prosecuted under the officers of the Government, prompted and approved by the Administration and all law-abiding citizens. Those indictments have been followed as consistently and as persistently as the conditions required and have already resulted in some convictions, and may possibly result in others. Whatever we may do with that portion of the investigation relative to the recommendations of Members of the House, which naturally pursued the ordinary channel through the divisions under investigation, nevertheless the wisdom of the investigation and the thoroughness of it have been demonstrated outside of and beyond whatever connection Members of this body may have had with respect to the recommendations sent to them by their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, a second fact is well understood, that when that investigation had been concluded, because of the suggestion of the Department of Justice having control of the prosecutions, it was feared that complete publication of all the papers might in some manner embarrass and hinder the continuation of those prosecutions to their proper conclusion, it followed that an abstract of the report, consisting only and limited to some five or six thousand words, was given to the press. In that abstract appeared all of the language suggesting the conduct of the Members of the House which all the remainder of the publication has elicited. The language involved in the resolution now before this body was contained in the abstract of that report which was first given to the public.

Upon the assembling of this Congress, complaint and criticism were made that the report had not been given that publicity that it deserved and which the country expected should follow an investigation of that character. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of this House, having control of and charged with the duty of preparing the appropriation bill, brought before this body a resolution which should give to the committee the authority to call for the papers which had been made out and considered in this investigation. That resolution (being resolution No. 41) read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is hereby authorized to request the Postmaster-General to send to the committee all papers connected with the recent investigation of his Department.

That resolution, Mr. Speaker, was passed by this body early in the month of December. Under that authority the committee, with the honest intention of careful scrutiny of the estimates of the Department before they made recommendations for appropriations, called for the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and made that report public. Criticism was at that time made upon the committee for the speed with which it had recommended that publication. Charges were made on the other side of this Chamber that the committee should go further and make additional publication. Comment was made within the committee, on both sides of the table, relative to the propriety of such publication. That publication resulted in showing to the country that no Member of the House had any intention of withholding from the fullest possible publicity any matter connected with that investigation.

When these reports were published there ceased at once the demand of the public for copies, because when once the thing had been made known which theretofore they had been unable to obtain they discovered it was needless to go into exaggerated accounts of the investigation, which was found to have been thorough and comprehensive. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, from the very beginning it has been claimed by the press of this country, supported, I believe, by public sentiment, that all references in that investigation to the recommendations made by Members of Congress should be given equal publicity. Acting under the authority of House resolution 41, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads addressed to the Postmaster-General a letter under date of January 25, 1904. I quote from the letter without reading all of it:

In view of the references of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in his report to you under date of October 24, 1903, to the action of Members of Congress in recommending increase of clerk hire, and cancellation of leases and their renewal at a higher rate, I request that this committee be furnished at the earliest practicable date a complete list of all cases referred to in said report relating to allowances for clerk hire in offices where those allowances have subsequently been discontinued, and also of all cases where leases of post-office premises have been canceled and renewed at a higher rate, together with a statement in detail giving a full explanation of the facts connected with each case.

The Postmaster-General, in obedience to that request, sent to the committee all of the cases which the committee has received, which were later published in connection with this report and as a part of it.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman from Indiana now, on that point, allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I dislike to be discourteous. I will yield for this question, but I trust that I will not be interrupted further.

Mr. MADDOX. You wrote for all those cases?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have just quoted the letter.

Mr. MADDOX. I find on examination of the report——
Mr. OVERSTREET. I would much prefer to have the gentleman take some time——
Mr. MADDOX. Here is what I want you to answer as you go along.
Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield again, if you will put it in the form of a question.
Mr. MADDOX. Why does he not include in the official report now the names that he included in the first instance when he charged Members of both Houses? Why are they not in this report now? How were they kept out and why were they kept out?
Mr. OVERSTREET. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the committee having authority already conferred by this body, which I have read, received upon this request all of the papers which were contained in the report transmitted to the House upon this resolution.
Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker——
Mr. OVERSTREET. I decline to yield further at this time.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, we had then before us the references which the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General had made in his investigation to the conduct of Members of the House. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, seventeen in membership, representing seventeen States of this Union, are as representative men as you will ordinarily find upon any committee of this House, so far as geographical distribution and ordinary intelligence are concerned. They represent both of the great political parties of the country.

Notwithstanding we are upon the eve of a national Presidential campaign; notwithstanding the fact that partisanship always as now runs high; notwithstanding efforts are constantly being made by opposing newspapers in politics to fasten upon and exaggerate the conduct of their opponents for political reasons, nevertheless it must be said, to the credit of the membership of that committee, that it was unanimous in its belief that all of the cases submitted by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General under that request failed to disclose that there had been any violation of law on the part of Members, save and except a strictly technical violation of the letter of the law in the three cases where the property of Members has been rented to the Government. With those exceptions there had been no violation of any law in any of the cases which were before the committee.

More than that, that membership unanimously believed that there was no impropriety nor act of moral turpitude upon the part of any Member mentioned in all of those cases.

This resolution had demanded of that committee a recommendation that the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of five to investigate the charges contained in the "whereases" of the resolution. The committee believed then, and believe now, that with the exception of the exhibits of post-office inspectors, to be used as evidence in the trial of these indicted men, this last report from the Department covered the remaining portions of the investigation which had not theretofore been made public.

Now, we were confronted with this situation: If we reported back to the House this resolution with a recommendation that it be acted upon favorably and that the Speaker appoint such a committee, that in itself, we then believed and now believe, would have carried an imputation upon Members of this body that we believed an investigation was proper because of some misconduct which was disclosed in those cases.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. OVERSTREET. Just for a question.
Mr. FINLEY. Is it not a fact that the members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads believe that in the report which had been sent to them by the Postmaster-General all the facts were set out in detail and a full statement made of each and every case? Is that not true?
Mr. OVERSTREET. I think the gentleman is correct. They believed that all of the details were practically before them.
Mr. FINLEY. And all of the essential facts.
Mr. OVERSTREET. All of the essential facts.
Mr. FINLEY. The committee believed that, and acting on that belief they reported that. Now, I ask the gentleman this——
Mr. OVERSTREET. My attention has just been momentarily distracted by a gentleman sitting near me. Will the gentleman be kind enough to repeat his question?
Mr. FINLEY. I say is it not true that the committee acted upon that belief, and then made the report which they did make on the resolution?
Mr. OVERSTREET. Acted upon what belief? I did not quite understand.
Mr. FINLEY. On the belief that they had a full statement in the report which had been made to the committee of every case and of all the facts and details connected with each case; is not that true?
Mr. OVERSTREET. I think, Mr. Speaker, that I am quite within the facts when I say that the committee, having called for the cases referred to in the original report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General relative to the conduct of Members, believed that they had before them in the report which he sent to us the cases to which he had made reference in his original report.
Mr. FINLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker——
Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not care to yield any further.
Mr. FINLEY. One more question.
Mr. OVERSTREET. No; I decline to yield.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Speaker, that was the unanimous belief of the committee, that a report recommending the appointment of an additional committee would itself carry to the House an imputation made by the Post-Office Committee, and believed by it to be true, that there were instances which warranted a further investigation as to the conduct of Members.

A second alternative was opened to the committee, and that was that we report to this body that we had these papers before us, that we had gone through them, that we found nothing in them that warranted further investigation, that we did not believe there was any violation of law, that we did not believe any Member had been guilty of moral turpitude or improper conduct, and therefore, in view of that, we recommended that the resolution lie upon the table.

But, Mr. Speaker, we would at once have been confronted with the inquiry: Why do you withhold from publication what you have on the files of your committees? Why do you continue to suppress the information which it is openly charged in the press you are withholding, which if given the light of day would involve and implicate Members of Congress in acts in violation of law and carrying with them moral turpitude?

Mr. Speaker, it has been well said upon this floor that there is no Member of this or the other body of Congress who seeks to suppress one piece of information where a Member of Congress is involved or even suspected or criticised for his act.

That thing which is secret and hidden is always taken up by those carping critics, both in and out of journalism, in their effort to magnify and exaggerate to the embarrassment, displeasure, and injury of the persons referred to. It remains as true to-day as when the statement was first made, that "trifles light as air become to willing ears truth as binding as holy writ." Your committee believes, therefore, that the proper, the open way, which would be approved by the country, was to say to this House that under the authority given it we have before us the remaining portions of the Bristow report yet unpublished; we have the references in his investigations to the acts of Members of Congress; and believing that these criticisms made by the press and by the carping critics that Members were guilty of violations both of law and propriety were unfounded, were "as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal," that we give the whole thing to the House and the country, in view of the fact that there was nothing in that report which any fair-minded man could use in criticism of the conduct of the Members who had made the recommendations; that there was no further need of an additional committee, which must in the end be forced to the same conclusion, and that, therefore, the resolution which it had been considering should lie on the table.

Mr. Speaker, it is no new thing to the country to have public men and their conduct misjudged and their acts criticised by people as well as by the press. We are in the same company to-day that every public officer since the days of Washington has been obliged to appear in, where the full light of public opinion and the searchlight of the press necessarily are turned upon us. Your committee has believed, therefore, that the better policy was not to sit behind closed doors, with the blinds drawn, but with the window open and the blinds up, that the sun might shine in upon its doings, and, when the publications were made of all these transactions of the Members of this body, the same sunshine would dissipate those criticisms as it dissipates the frost upon the window in its noonday glory. We believed, therefore, that these statements contained in the report which we submit would be found by an investigating committee to be the same.

I think it entirely proper, Mr. Speaker, to make some personal and specific reference to the three cases where there is unquestionably, based upon the strict letter of the law, an apparent violation of the law. There were three individuals who rented their individual property for post-office purposes.

Mr. BOWERSOCK, a distinguished Member from Kansas, was the owner of a building in which the post-office had been for thirty years, more than a quarter of a century before he was honored by a seat in this body. That lease had continued from year to year and been renewed at its expiration, and when he became a Member of the House and had his attention called to the law, he deliberately and openly acted, with all propriety, in having the title of the lease changed. The Government desired his property and itself fixed the terms of rent.

In the case of Mr. LILLEY, of Connecticut, who owned property in the room in which the post-office had been for a number of years under a lease between him and the Government, the rental of the property was entirely satisfactory to the owner and to the Government. After he became a Member he called the attention of the Department to his ownership, and openly and frankly offered to cancel the lease and withhold the property from Government use. The Government of itself, as in the first case, desired the room, and upon their request the lease was changed to another party, in order to answer the purposes of the Department.

In the case of Mr. WADSWORTH, of New York, the office has occupied a building owned by him for seventeen years. When he was elected to this body the office occupied that building. Upon a petition signed by Democrats as well as Republicans he fixed up that room for the benefit of that community and let the Government itself fix the terms of rent, and answered their demands for additional improvements and equipment for the office. After becoming a Member of this body, his attention being called to the statute, he willingly and openly offered to have the office changed, but, upon request of the Government, which desired the continuation of the rent, transferred the lease to another person. The Department and the committee itself considered the subject and agree in every instance that there was only a technical violation of the strictest possible letter of the law, and no impropriety could be charged to either one of these individuals.

Gentlemen are familiar with the methods of allowance for clerk hire and rent of buildings, which necessarily must pass through that division of the Department which has been under such a surveillance and severe investigation. The test upon which it is determined by the Department what allowance shall be made in specific instances for clerk hire at these several offices is a test of the Department under a regulation of its own making, and is a secret test to them alone, and unknown to the public and the membership of Congress. Therefore, whenever a Member of this House may recommend an increase of clerk-hire allowance at a third or fourth class office he has no knowledge, and could have no knowledge, of the regulations which determine by a test known only to the Department the fixed amount which that particular office was entitled to.

I defy any individual, however narrow his mind, to put any criticism upon such recommendation. The law relative to the lease of post-office property is contained in the post-office appropriation bills, and it is within the discretion and power of the Department to determine the amount of the allowance, limited only by the law as to the upset price in offices of certain sizes. Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that both of these situations relative to recommendations of clerk hire and rentals were not in violation of any law nor in any way improper to be recommended by Members, there could be no aspersion upon any Members any more than that aspersion which since Washington's day has unfortunately rested in the minds of narrow-minded people against all public officers of all stages and conditions. The committee, therefore, took the position that the House could only follow the rule which we have already agreed upon, that there is nothing to be concealed, nothing to be hidden; that we believe that there was no impropriety in these recommendations, and therefore would not add insult to injury by asking an investigation when we had before us facts which clearly demonstrated that such investigation would prove no more than we were in possession of already.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us briefly analyze this situation and consider it in a calm manner. We all agree that we do not propose to withhold anything from public gaze. We all agree that there is nothing in these cases which have been made public. We all agree that the methods and practices pursued by Members are honorable and both in harmony and in keeping with long-established custom; therefore, what good can come from pursuing the investigation further, in view of the resolution which we now report to the House? That resolution, Mr. Speaker, is a privileged resolution. We were obliged to make some report upon it. The gentleman from Virginia and other Members of the House were frequently demanding a report and using the rule that unless we made report they could discharge the committee from its consideration and leave the committee criticised for nonaction and nonperformance of its duty. The committee, therefore, bring this to this body. Members criticise, claiming that the report does not show all of the transactions between a Member and the Department.

Whether the report shows all of the transactions or no, there is nothing in the report which impugns any moral turpitude or impropriety of conduct upon Members. Suppose, therefore, that the House shall take the other horn of the dilemma and vote down the motion to lay this resolution upon the table, and vote the resolution through. Then the Speaker appoints a committee of five Members of the House to make the investigation concerning these same references in the Bristow report on the conduct of Members, and that committee will come back to this body. I prophesy, although I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, that the same conclusion will be reached, that there is nothing in these statements impugning any moral turpitude or impropriety of conduct upon a Member. You will then have the situation of a report of a second committee of five instead of seventeen. Understand, gentlemen, the members of the Post-Office Committee entertain no sensitive view with respect to this matter. We do not ask any support simply because the defeat of the committee in its recommendation would be construed by us as any special reflection upon us. Whether we adopted it or not, you would have the same right. But, Mr. Speaker, that additional committee would necessarily pursue this inquiry to the same cases referred to in the Bristow report, involving or relating to the conduct of Members of the House.

Now, gentlemen, if you believe that Members of this body have been guilty of either violations of the law or such misconduct as to warrant censure, then such further investigation should be made. If you believe that there is no such act of violation by Members or impropriety of conduct worthy of censure, what good will there be in an additional investigation? Members may quarrel with a great Department of the Government; Members may exercise their freedom of speech and acts by criticising and abusing some of the officers of that great Department, but when your committee on investigation has withdrawn into its room under the authority of this body and prepares to perform its functions it will pursue that investigation of misconduct of Members referred to in the Bristow report, and when you return you will exonerate the Members of this body, I honestly believe, in view of the evidence which has come under the notice of our committee and of you gentlemen to this hour.

I know it is an embarrassment, Mr. Speaker, for Members to have their names appear in the press along with the names of men who have been indicted for misconduct in office. I can conceive why a Member should feel resentful and angry that that should be done, but Members must remember this, that there never has been a time when any Member of this House could decline or refuse to give the fullest possible publicity to all of the matters referred to in the Bristow report making reference to the conduct of Members of the House. That publicity has now been made. I believe that the same public sentiment, that the same public press which have for some months insisted upon complete publication of these matters, that in some instances, unfortunately and unfairly, have been guilty of criticism and charges not based upon the truth, will in their inquiry and reference to this additional publication have the fairness to make amends for those unfair criticisms and false statements and say frankly to the public that these recommendations have been in entire keeping with the system and practice which for years has prevailed between Members representing the great constituencies of this country and the Department with which they have had dealings.

I doubt if there are many Members of either branch of Congress who have not been called upon to make recommendation relative to the pension cases pending before the Pension Bureau. Hundreds of thousands of those letters of ours are on the files in that Bureau. In the multitude of business pressing for attention on Members of Congress brought to their attention by their constituents, it is reasonable to be expected that in many instances letters would be addressed to the Pension Bureau making recommendations for favorable action upon cases which were subsequently rejected. There is no more imputation to be placed upon Members of this body because recommendations were made by them to post-office officials upon request of their constituents than would properly lie against their recommendations relative to the pension cases pending before that great Bureau.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the fact that we have undertaken to conceal nothing, that we have at all times believed in the widest publicity, believed that this publication involved no proper criticism of immoral or improper conduct upon any Member of this House, that the ways of justice and the demands of the country have been fully complied with without the Members of this House being properly or fairly subject to any criticism whatever, and that there should be an end to the matter, and it should be regarded as a closed incident. I believe firmly, Mr. Speaker, that if that could be determined upon by this body that in less than twenty-one days it would appear in the public press that there had been a great to-do made by the press of the country over a very small matter, and that the Members of this House had acted openly and honorably, making a full disclosure of all the papers connected with the investigation, and, deeming that sufficient, had not felt justified in recommending the further investigation, and therefore I trust the motion to lay this resolution on the table will prevail.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman if we do not vote down the motion to let the resolution lie on the table, then how could we possibly get a hearing for the proposed amendment to investigate the Post-Office Department? In other words, is not this the parliamentary situation: This being a motion to lie on the table, any other motion would be out of order until that motion was voted down?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary situation is just this: The resolution under consideration is purely a privileged resolution, because it has reference to the conduct of the Members of the House. A motion to amend that resolution, or to offer a substitute to the resolution, a proposition for an investigation of the Post-Office Department, would not be a privileged question. I think the gentleman will admit that himself. If the motion to lay this resolution on the table should be voted down, the substitute amendment for post-office investigation would be just as obnoxious to the rule then as if offered before the motion to table had been put.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But is there not this difference, that in the first case the Chair would just rule that this being a motion to lay on the table of course nothing is in order; but in the second place, unless some Member rose in his place and made the point of order, then the resolution would be considered?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I quite agree with the gentleman, that if nobody should interpose a point of order, the Chair would not interpose it of his own motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, I express the hope that no point of order will be interposed, so that the House may investigate the Post-Office Department as well as having the Post-Office Department investigate the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman, however, must understand that this committee has had before it a privileged resolution, a resolution dealing with the conduct of the Members of this body. The committee felt compelled to act by performing its duty under the rule, and made no effort to conceal its disposition to finally in some way make a report upon that privileged resolution.

It therefore became the unanimous agreement of that committee of representatives of both political parties that there was nothing known to the committee, although it had before it what it believed was all the papers from the Department relating to the Members of Congress referred to by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in his report, and, there being nothing in it, having this information which we believed ought to be made public, we recommended that it lie on the table. It is entirely a different proposition as to the wisdom of a further investigation of the Department and in no wise properly related or germane to the proposition for an investigation of Members of the House. I will meet that proposition, if it shall arise, when it does arise. I think neither the committee nor myself have so far shrunk from any duty which it felt was properly imposed upon us, and bringing this resolution back to the House with that unanimous agreement which ninety days ago scarcely any individual in the country would believe possible, I should indulge the hope that the gentleman's party would stand by their representatives on that committee in their recommendation to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] will now ask for an extension of the time of this debate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think I should.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On yesterday the gentleman said that an hour on a side was quite sufficient, but upon my substantial demand an hour was added to that time. Now, the gentleman has used an entire hour——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I acknowledge the justice of the gentleman's criticism, and I believe I should ask for an extension of time for this debate. As other Members sometimes do, I paid no attention to the time and spoke much longer than I had any intention of doing. I therefore ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the debate on this question may continue until 4 o'clock to-morrow, the time to be equally divided between or controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LACEY in the chair). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the debate on this resolution be extended until 4 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to enter into the main question presented here. I wanted three minutes for the purpose merely of answering the last remark of the gentleman from Indiana. I believe there would be—indeed, I know there would be—no desire on this side to oppose the report of the committee in favor of laying this resolution upon the table, provided the other side would promise not to raise a point of order upon a substitute to go further and investigate the Post-Office Department, and thus permit that substitute to be voted on. If we vote down the motion to lay upon the table, it will be for the purpose of getting a parliamentary entry for the resolution which we desire to offer. I desired to say just that much in response to the last words of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does not the gentleman from Mississippi admit that at the time this report was agreed upon it was further agreed that the gentleman from Indiana would reserve the right to make the point of order against the proposition that the gentleman now speaks of; and when gentlemen on the other side go back upon that agreement do they not go back upon their representatives upon the Post-Office Committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was not addressing myself to the question whether we were or were not going back upon the members of the committee. I was addressing myself simply to the point of explaining why we would vote down the proposition to lay on the table, if we should so vote. I am not talking now as to whether we are or are not going back upon the minority members of the committee. I decline to discuss that question. The minority, I think, the gentlemen will find capable of taking care of themselves.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not blame the gentleman for declining to discuss it——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is not the time to discuss it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Because he must go back upon the minority members of the committee if he does what he now announces he will do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think the gentlemen of the minority on the committee, who may be called on to face that parliamentary situation, will take a different view in the course they may now feel called upon to pursue.

Mr. BURLESON. Why can we not, when voting to lay the resolution on the table, also vote to investigate the Post-Office Department?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is what we want the opportunity to do. If we vote down the motion to lay on the table, we want an opportunity to offer a substitute to go further and investigate the Post-Office Department, thereby including both purposes—to wit, the purpose of further investigating alleged irregularities in so far as Senators and Representatives and also in so far as employees of the Post-Office Department are concerned.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman will permit me to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not exactly agree with him that the only reason we propose to vote to lay this resolution on the table is to get an opportunity for a wider scope. I want the wider scope, but it does not seem to me that we ought to put ourselves in the position of voting for the general investigation and voting down the investigation of Members of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is putting words into my mouth that never proceeded therefrom.

Mr. HAY. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What I said was this: That I was satisfied there would be no objection on this side of the House to voting for the motion to lay this resolution on the table if the other side would make no point of order upon a substitute to go further and investigate the employees of the Post-Office Department. I believe the substitute would pass, and therefore the motion to lie on the table would be unnecessary.

Mr. HAY. That is exactly where I differ with the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me just one question? I want to ask him this question: Suppose an amendment calling for an investigation of the Post-Office Department were subject to a point of order before the motion to lay on the table was put, would it not still be subject to a point of order after such motion had been voted down?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. At least one point of order would be out of the way. The other point we will argue when we get to it. I am not certain whether the second point of order would lie; but what I want to state is this: That an agreement can be entered into whereby we shall vote that the resolution lie on the table, provided you will agree that a substitute to investigate the Post-Office Department by a select committee of the House may be voted for.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But the gentleman said a moment ago that if such a point of order should be interposed, then the only course that could be pursued would be first to vote down the motion to table and then offer the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, would the offering of the amendment after the motion to lay upon the table had been voted down give it an additional or different parliamentary status than it occupied before?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It would leave it less obnoxious to a parliamentary objection. There would be at least one point of order out of the way. Now, can we not enter into an agreement——

Mr. BURLESON. By unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not think the gentleman would object, provided we could get what we want.

Mr. OVERSTREET. You had better get together on that side first.

Mr. HAY. I do not know that we are any further apart on this side than you are on the other, for that matter.

Mr. BOWIE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BOWIE. I want to know whether, in the proposition you have just submitted to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], you meant that this side would be willing to vote for the motion to lay on the table this resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would agree to vote for the motion to lay on the table, provided they would vote for the other resolution as a substitute, to wit, providing for the appointment of a select committee by the Speaker to investigate the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BOWIE. Together with this House?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To investigate it, everybody, including the employees of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BOWIE. So you do not propose, then, to eliminate the investigation of Members of the House?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, no.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to proceed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would prefer that you go on now for a while.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, after a moment I shall yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

I feel that we ought to be entirely frank about this condition. In my opinion there is but one thing for the House to do if it repects itself or if it respects the country, and that is to enter into a general investigation. That investigation of the Department will necessarily, in view of the facts that have been adduced before the country, reach into this House. There is no use denying that proposition. It will, I fear, reach with force and power in places into this House. We want the investigation to cover the Department and to cover everybody connected with it, and whoever is guilty, whether in this House or in the Department, let him be exposed.

The membership of the House accused are entitled to a vindication at the hands of the House, if that membership believes that the charges made against them constitute a substantial indictment. The Department ought to be vindicated if they have been guilty of no wrong; but I take it that no sensible man, in view of the developments, will say aught less than that crime yet uninvestigated has been committed in the Department. Now, what is the position of the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman goes further, I want to state this: Some gentlemen were telling me that I did not make myself clear. I thought I had. What I meant is exactly what the gentleman has just said. Of course, if our resolution amending this were adopted, then it would be a general investigation of the entire Post-Office Department, and would involve its dealings with the Members of the House and Senate, as well as everything else.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Any parliamentary advantage that is taken here will be perfectly understood by the country. You had as well understand that now as hereafter. [Applause.]

The resolution is a privileged one. The committee are confined by the scope of that resolution to exactly what they have done. The committee could not have done less nor more, they could have done nothing else sensibly but recommend, in view of the facts, that the resolution lie upon the table, because we do not believe that you have been guilty of crime or intentional wrong. If you insist that you are, we are ready and willing that you shall further investigate yourselves; but we know that the Department has been guilty, and we insist upon that investigation, which will necessarily cover you. Well, what is the attitude of the resolution?

There has been presented to this House a privileged resolution and a report on it and a recommendation that the resolution lie on the table. In my judgment the point of order is clearly well taken, when a resolution by way of amendment or substitute is offered asking for a general investigation under a specially privileged resolution, report, and motion, because it will not be germane to the privileged resolution. Then, the point of order can be successfully interposed by the gentlemen on the other side to a general investigation under the present status. Then, in order to obtain a general investigation we must overrule the Speaker in a correct decision on a point of order. So, after all, if we have an investigation properly under this resolution it must be by the unanimous consent of the House and the withholding, in my judgment, of the point of order. Honestly willing, as in my opinion you are, to have an investigation, why interpose the only thing that will prevent a general investigation?

If you withhold the point of order under the parliamentary situation that will exist, the resolution can be amended; and if you feel that you need further vindication, which we do not think you do, you can obtain it, and you can investigate the Department that has made these charges and confessed to these crimes. So do not attempt to get away from that question. If an investigation of this Department is prevented, it will be by reason of a parliamentary objection behind which you shield the crime of the Department. The question, then, is can you afford it, gentlemen? Can you afford to be acquitted on a technical ground of this sort? That is the only issue before you. We are not going to insist upon the Chair holding otherwise than he ought to hold, and, as far as I am concerned, I am not willing to vote to overrule the opinion of the Chair if he holds that this objection can properly be interposed, and, in my judgment, he will do so.

So at last it goes back to you. Are you going to shield the criminals in this Department by the proposition that the amendment proposed is subject to the point of order? The country will say to you certainly, if you do it, that you are afraid of any further investigation yourselves; that you know if an investigation is opened up in the Department, that it is going to involve you gentlemen who are charged. We say that under the proof before us we do not see that you are guilty of any crime; but the country will say that there is some other proof there that has not come out; that the Department has something else that it does not want to give that will expose the Administration Members or the Democratic Members, as the case may be, and that therefore the House hid behind the point of order in order to protect the Department secondarily, but to protect itself primarily, from these charges. I do not believe that honest men can afford to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in my career I have ever risen to comment upon the use of my name in connection with any charge; and I would not rise now if the report made by the Post-Office Department to the Post-Office Committee of this House had been fair, full, or honest. I know that is a serious statement, but if gentlemen will bear with me I will convince them that the same insincerity, indirection, and dishonesty that the people of this country believe exist in that Department characterize the statement that it forwarded to the committee of this House.

I want to say, so far as I am concerned, I believe that no good or respectable man who knows me or who knows of me will ever suspect my conduct in regard to the renting of the post-office at Oxford, N. C. But hereafter some backbiter of a meaner mold or some malicious enemy may call up this very matter—may point to this Post-Office Department statement, and accusingly refer to the use of my name, and call upon my friends for some explanation of it. Gentlemen, just as that Department has treated my name it has treated the name of many gentlemen upon that side as well as upon this side of the House.

In instances of prominent Republicans that Department has been careful to put in every fact that would completely justify the Member's conduct, while in reference to other Members on both sides it has failed to do so. I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that this is not a political matter. Mr. Speaker, our consideration of it is not political. Our conduct upon it should not be political. But I assert here and now that the report sent to our committee is characterized by politics and is partisan.

I can understand how the distinguished gentleman from Iowa may think nothing else can be discovered by further investigation, because for him, in reference to the renting of the post-office at Afton, Iowa, that Department was careful to incorporate every material fact that would show that he had done nothing except what a diligent Representative was required to do. The same is true in reference to stating the facts in regard to the renting of the office in the town of Franklin, Ind., represented by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The same is true in stating the facts in regard to the rental of the post-office at Watseka, Ill., represented by the distinguished Speaker of this House, and in other instances of recommendations by leading Republicans.

But, gentlemen, when the author of that report comes down to men of not so much influence with that Department, whether they be on that side or on this side, there is in my judgment a willful, deliberate suppression of material and important facts, facts which were not overlooked, facts which could not be overlooked, facts which were a part of the record filed in their cases and suppressed, in my judgment, for the purpose of giving a false impression to the country and misleading the public.

Gentlemen, it is not a small thing to trifle with the reputation of a man established through years of busy and stirring life. It is not an idle thing for that Department to mingle your name and mine in a list intended to represent to the country scandal and suspicion. There must have been some evil and deliberate purpose on the part of him who so abominably performed his duty under the letters sent to the Department by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee under the resolution pending before it. The Bristow report had made charges reflecting upon the membership of the House.

Mr. Bristow had made the charge, among others, in the language of the resolution, that "long-time leases for post-office premises were canceled and the rent increased upon the recommendation of influential Representatives."

By that he intended to charge and did charge undue influence exercised by influential men over the Department. The letter of the chairman of the Post-Office Committee to the Postmaster-General requested that that committee—be furnished at the earliest practicable date a complete list of all cases referred to in said report relating to allowances for clerk hire in offices where those allowances have subsequently been discontinued, and also of all cases where leases of post-office premises have been canceled and renewed at a higher rate, together with a statement in detail giving a full explanation of the facts connected with each case.

The charges were serious, yet when the accuser was called upon to substantiate them he had not the intelligence or the courage to clearly specify the cases he had in mind and cite the evidence upon them, but evasively he lugs in 176 cases of post-office rentings. He brings in every case, however worthy, free from suspicion and commendable in every respect, in which diligent Representatives had endeavored to serve their petitioning constituents in the matter of rentings. He brings all in in senseless response to proper inquiries about his charges. Is such conduct honest? Is it courageous? Was it in answer to inquiries? Ah, no. He was endeavoring to confuse the situation for partisan purposes. He knew that the country demanded a Congressional investigation of the Post-Office Department.

He undertook, in my judgment, to blackmail into silence Congress and the country. He may have thought that upon placing that report before the committee Congress would become alarmed, would fail to publish it, and quit the talk of investigation. Since he had to name some he determined to drag everyone in it. If he must name his friends, he would also name all others, though entirely blameless. He would put the legislative branch of the Government under the same suspicion which rests upon his Department, and intimidate it into inactivity. Will you say that he shall thus stop our investigation? Let our conduct hereafter answer to the country. If we have no full investigation, it shall be your fault, not ours.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to direct, positive testimony of suppression, willful and deliberate. Take the renting in the town of Oxford, the only instance in which my name is mentioned in this entire report. Concerning my conduct upon this as upon all other matters I challenge the strictest scrutiny, and defy every calumniator to bring his accusation, whether made directly or indirectly, into the light. I was astonished to find the Oxford renting mentioned, because I knew that any faithful and honest attempt to enlighten Congress in compliance with the resolution and the letter of the committee would confine the accuser to instances directly or indirectly sustaining his charges.

In Oxford there had been no long-time lease. In Oxford there was no lease canceled. And with all due modesty it had never occurred to me that the most imaginative person could class me as an influential Representative with the Post-Office Department as now or then constituted.

An honest brief of the case would have disclosed the most material facts in the whole record, but they are deliberately omitted. He first reports a letter written by myself—dated House of Representatives, United States, etc., but written during vacation while I was at my home in Roxboro, N. C.—in which, on behalf of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Oxford, the owner of the building occupied by the post-office, I recommended an increase of rent. I closed that letter by asking that an agent be sent there to ascertain the facts and hoping that the rent would be increased to a proper and just amount.

Then follows, Mr. Speaker, in this report, a letter from the Department, replying to mine. Then a letter from the postmaster at Oxford, saying that the rent then paid, $200, was enough. I shall not quote the entire report on Oxford, but shall ask leave to print it with my remarks. Then follows a second letter from the Department to myself, informing me of the refusal to increase the rent. The date of that is November 15, 1901. The only other publication is a letter of February 18, 1902, more than three months thereafter, to me saying that in compliance with my recommendation, the proposition for an increase of the rent, etc., had been allowed.

What is the false inference that they wickedly intended the country should draw from that? They intended to leave the impression that there were no further facts and that the Department had yielded to my undue influence and favorably acted upon my recommendation, etc. What were the facts? What transpired during those three months which the Department suppressed? I will not, Mr. Speaker, refer to any matters of a personal character or that gave me more knowledge than the Department had. I shall only refer to matters filed in the Department and which in the record of the case are attached to those published in the report. On yesterday I went to the Department, read the record, and demanded copies of certain papers in that record, which I will ask to insert in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. Gentlemen, here are facts similar to those that were incorporated in the report in the cases of the prominent Republicans I have mentioned. The postmaster's first letter was dated November 13, 1901. On January 8, 1902, the postmaster writes again and says, "You will remember that I advised you not to grant the increase." In it she states that the owner of the building occupied by the postoffice wanted an increase of rent to $300 a year, and she recommended it. This letter was suppressed in the report.

On January 14, 1902, the postmaster writes the Department again and states that another party is offering $300 a year for the premises—mind you, this is exclusive of furniture, safe, etc.—and the postmaster again recommends paying the increase and gives her reasons for it. This letter is suppressed in that report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. On the 14th of January, 1902, the postmaster sends to the Department a letter, which it has on file in the Oxford case, from Mr. H. M. Shaw, a reputable attorney in that town, a distinguished gentleman, an old friend and college mate of mine, I will say by the way, who was representing the Odd Fellows' Lodge, the owner of the building, in which he reviewed the entire situation, in which he stated to the postmaster that the Odd Fellows had an offer of $600 a year for that room and the room adjoining it, but that they preferred the post-office to remain there, but if the Government would not increase the rent the post-office must move, as there was a bona fide offer for the property at an increased rate. Gentlemen, this important letter of Mr. Shaw is suppressed in that report.

There is a petition filed by myself on February 1, 1902, signed by ninety-three of the best citizens of that town, saying that the rent demanded, which was $300 a year, was fair and reasonable, and protesting against changing the post-office site, and asking that it be kept in that place. That petition is suppressed in that report. When I filed that petition or protest, as the brief puts it, the Department requested me to get two propositions from the Odd Fellows, one with safe, furniture, etc., and one without them. The Department gave me two blank forms, which I forwarded.

The Odd Fellows made them two propositions—one at $300 a year for the naked room, and one at $360 a year to be furnished by the Odd Fellows. A copy of both propositions I have here and will insert in the RECORD. When the Department received these propositions it accepted the proposition for the furnished room. No honest man, knowing the facts, can for a moment tolerate the insinuated imputation against myself or the good people of Oxford.

Now, another thing. In the letter of the Postmaster-General of March 2 he says:

These cases—

Which includes the Oxford case—

at the date of my communication of February 5 were withdrawn from the files of the Department and were under investigation by inspectors and others.

Gentlemen, I went to the Department yesterday morning, saw the papers in the case, and examined the last report. It is by Mr. Wood, the assistant superintendent, and states that in his opinion the rent was not excessive. Its date is January 25, 1904. He did, however, recommend new furniture.

Now, I have nothing else to say, so far as the Oxford case is concerned, but gentlemen on that side of the House, can you permit any man mentioned in that report, who may not have an opportunity to explain the facts in his case, to rest under such suspicion that a blackmailer or a backbiter may assail him when you have it in your power to require full investigation? Will you do that? Will you be intimidated or will you rise to the height of courage and let this whole matter have the light of day thrown upon it. Honest men do not dread the light, and all others should have it and be driven from the public service.

We ought to have an investigation. The general public of the United States ought to have it because they suspect that Department. So, thanking the gentleman from Tennessee for the limited time I have been permitted to occupy, I now yield the floor, first asking permission, Mr. Speaker, to insert these papers in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following are the papers referred to:

[From the report of the Post-Office Department to the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.]

OXFORD, N. C.

At Oxford, N. C., in 1901, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,600, the allowances were $200 for rent and $54 for fuel and light. On November 5, 1901, Hon. W. W. KITCHIN addressed a letter to the Postmaster-General stating the owners of the premises desired an increase in rent to $360 per annum. The postmaster, when asked for a report on the subject, stated the adjoining store, same size as post-office premises and under the same management, was rented at $300 per annum, that no increase in rental had been demanded for it, and expressed the opinion that the Department was paying enough rent. The application for increased rental was denied.

Following entry appears in the brief of the case:

"February 1, 1902. Hon. W. W. KITCHIN called up case and will endeavor to get proposition from Odd Fellows. He files protest against removal of post-office from present quarters."

On March 25, 1902, the allowance for rent was increased from $300 to $360 per annum, effective April 1, 1902.

The following correspondence appears in the files:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., November 5, 1901.

Hon. POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of the Odd Fellows' Lodge of Oxford, N. C., the owner of the building used by the post-office in that town, I have been requested to recommend an increase in the rents paid by the Government for the rooms occupied by the post-office. Believing that the rent should be increased, I cheerfully recommend it. My information is that the present rent is only $16⅔ per month. The lodge wants an increase to $30 per month. The premises are, in my opinion, the most suitable and convenient in the town. My information is that when the contract at $16⅔ was made there were several vacant stores or storehouses in Oxford; that now there is not one; that rents are much higher now in that town than they were then. Allow me to ask that you consider this matter and, if need be, send a special agent to Oxford, N. C., to find all the facts and report to the proper officer of your Department. I hope that the rent will be increased to a proper and just amount.

Yours, truly,

W. W. KITCHIN,
Member of Congress, Fifth North Carolina District.

NOVEMBER 11, 1901.

Hon. W. W. KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 5th instant, in which you urge an increase in the allowance for rent of post-office premises at Oxford, N. C., I beg to advise you that while the present allowance is less than what is sometimes granted offices of this grade, the amount requested by the owners of the premises, namely, $360, is considerably in excess of what is made for an office doing the business of the one at Oxford.

The postmaster has been requested to submit a report on the subject, when the matter will be further considered.

Very respectfully,

_____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

OXFORD, N. C., 11-13-1901.

Hon. W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

For the present I think the Post-Office Department is paying enough for post-office premises here. The store adjoining this, and the same size as this, and under the same management, pays only $300 per year rental. No increase in rental has been demanded of it.

The dimensions of the room we are in is 21 feet width by 66 feet long. The postmaster owns the fixtures and furniture. Advise me if any further demands are made for increase in rent.

Respectfully,

E. C. PEACE, P. M.

NOVEMBER 15, 1901.

Hon. W. W. KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to matter of increase in allowance for rent of post-office premises at Oxford, N. C., as recommended in your letter of the 5th instant, I beg to state that the matter has been investigated to some extent, and information received that room adjoining the present post-office premises, of the same size and under the same management, rents for the amount now allowed for room used by the post-office. It is also shown that no increase in rent has been requested for room adjoining post-office. Under the circumstances an increase can not be favorably considered.

Very respectfully,

_____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

FEBRUARY 18, 1902.

Hon. W. W. KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, United States.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your recommendation, the proposition of Oxford Lodge, No. 103, I. O. O. F., by H. M. Shaw, special commissioner, to lease the room now occupied by the post-office at Oxford, N. C., at the annual rental of $360, has this day been accepted for a term of five years from April 1, subject to the provisions and requirements of the form of lease used by the Department. It is understood that the lessors will provide all necessary boxes, fixtures, and furniture, a fire and burglar proof safe, etc.

Very respectfully,

_____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The following papers are suppressed in the report:

OXFORD, N. C., January 8, 1902.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The owners of the building now occupied by the post-office want an increase in rent from $200 per year to $300 per year. You will remember that I advised you not to grant the increase, for I thought we could get another building more satisfactory to us, but I now think it best to give them the increase as every building in town is now occupied and rents have increased considerably. I can't get another building like the one we are in for less than $300 per year, and it would be expensive moving the office if they should rent this building to some one else. The box rent of this office amounts to $300 per year. We furnish the boxes. Our sales have increased several hundred dollars more than they were last year. Please let me know whether you will grant the increase, and in case we have to move out if the Department will bear the expense of moving or whether the postmaster has to foot the bill.

Respectfully,

E. C. PEACE, P. M.

OXFORD, N. C., January 14, 1902.

Hon. J. M. MASTEN,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to yours of the 11th instant will say that I am informed that a party is offering $300 per year for the building now occupied by the post-office. I will give you a little history. About ten years ago the post-office was moved into the present brick building. At the time it was moved about half the storehouses in town were vacant and rents were almost nothing. The postmaster's salary was then $1,500 per year; now every available building in town is rented at good prices and $25 per month or $300 per year is cheap for this building. The postmaster's salary is $1,600, and will be increased to $1,700 the beginning of the fiscal year.

We are at present located in one of the best buildings in town, centrally located, and easily reached by all classes of people. If site is changed it will greatly inconvenience every one. Our sales of stamps, etc., are rapidly increasing, also box rents. The rents from boxes put in by the postmaster and owned by her amounts to $300 per year; this costs the Post-Office Department nothing. We have plenty of room, building is 63 feet long and 21 feet wide. We are informed that the Post-Office Department pays nearly $400 for the rent of the office in our neighboring town of Henderson, N. C. We do nearly the amount of business that they do.

The man that owns the building in Henderson also furnishes the outfit; here in Oxford the Odd Fellows furnish the building and the postmaster the boxes. The office in Henderson is not fixed as nice as ours nor have they as large, roomy building. In conclusion, we think $300 per year for this building reasonable enough, considering the increasing prosperity of the town and post-office revenues, and feel sure that if the Post-Office Department won't pay it other people will take advantage and rent the building for themselves

Respectfully,

E. C. PEACE, Postmaster.

OXFORD, N. C., January 14, 1902.

Mrs. ELLA C. PEACE,
Postmaster, Oxford, N. C.

MY DEAR MRS. PEACE: I desire to say to you, as a committee appointed by the Oxford Lodge, I. O. O. F., No. 103, that we desire an advance in the rent that the Government is now and has been for several years paying for the building or room occupied as a post-office, viz, $200 per annum, and desire that you call the attention of the Post-Office Department at Washington to the facts as I shall attempt to relate them, and request an increase of rent, to begin at once.

It is well known that when this room was let to the Government for a post-office numbers of business houses and residences in Oxford were vacant and had been vacant for some time; that rather than have them remain vacant the owners, when they could induce some one to occupy them at a very small sum, were only too glad to let them. Because of this fact the room in the Odd Fellows building, now occupied as post-office (and the room adjoining it, in the same building), was rented for $200 per annum. The room adjoining is not so large as the one occupied by the post-office, and we rented that for a term of five years at $200 per annum. The lease has expired and we are demanding more for it. We have not made a demand on the Government for an advance until we were in a position to make a demand for an advance on the other room.

It is also well known that at the present time, and for several months, vacant houses and stores have been in great demand, and at present there is not a vacant house or store in town that is desirable or conveniently located for business—in fact, no storehouse and not to exceed three or four cottages, if so many, and they can be rented when desired.

It is also well known that rents on all classes of property have increased, and especially on that well located for business purposes. There is not a store of the character and size of the room occupied by the post-office, and so conveniently located, that is not bringing as much as $25 per month, and in several instances more; but $25 is the lowest that such rents for. Furthermore, we are offered $50 per month for the room occupied as post-office and the one adjoining, and the parties desire to make the contract for a term of five years. You perhaps know the parties, and that they are financially responsible on their contracts.

We prefer, however, that the post-office should remain where it is. It is in the center of the town, in a good building, and more conveniently located for all classes of its patrons than any building in town. And we speak with some knowledge of the sentiments and desires of the business public with reference to this matter.

It is a fact well recognized, we think, that the post-office receipts at Oxford have increased very materially within the past year; that business is better with all classes of our citizens; that the population of the town has recently and is now increasing very perceptibly.

We are advised that the Government pays $27.50 per month for the room used as a post-office in Henderson, and we know that it is not near so large or desirable as the room occupied here for the same purpose. We think our room worth quite as much as that. As stated, we are offered $50 per month for the two rooms, and the room used as a post-office is larger and more desirable than the room adjoining.

For these reasons we think that we should have $30 per month for this room. The other (smaller room) will bring $25. But if we can get no increase from the Government we shall, in justice to ourselves, have to rent to the party making us the offer mentioned. We prefer, however, as representing a big majority of the business men of the town, to have the Government pay us a fair price for the room and keep the post-office where it is.

We request that you refer this matter to the Department and advise us of what we may depend upon.

Yours, very truly,

H. M. SHAW,
For Oxford Lodge, I. O. O. F., No. 103.

To the honorable the FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned patrons of the post-office at Oxford, N. C., being informed that the postmaster contemplates a removal of the office upon the grounds that he can rent a room at a lower price than that demanded by the Odd Fellows for the room now occupied by the post-office, desire to respectfully call the attention of the Department to the following:

1. That the present office is the most centrally and most conveniently located for all parties of any building in Oxford that can be rented for a post-office.

2. The rent asked by the Odd Fellows, viz, $25 per month, is reasonable and fair.

3. That to remove the office to any other place in town would be to the inconvenience of a great majority of its patrons and against the wishes of a vast majority of our citizens.

We therefore respectfully request the Department that the post-office be allowed to remain where it is now and has been for a number of years.

OXFORD LODGE, No. 103, I. O. O. F.,
By H. M. SHAW,
Special Committee to Lease Lodge Building.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the subject-matter of this debate is one of very serious importance. There is not a man who has been connected with the action of Congress for a series of years but what is conscious of the fact that the people of the country, incited thereto, no doubt, in a large part by false publications, have come to look with suspicion upon the members of the two Houses of Congress. I have never known a question of doubt to be solved by the press of the country in favor of the integrity of a Congressman. [Laughter.]

Here we have a pretty good specimen of the readiness with which the newspaper press of the country, and concurred in by all the people of the country, grasp the publication of a statement, and assume evil where they might assume good. So, Mr. Speaker, I shall not treat this matter as a matter of nonimportance. I shall treat it as deserving of the most serious consideration by every Member of this House and by every American citizen in the United States. [Applause.]

I hold in my hand a newspaper published in the city of New York, and I read from it only for the purpose of pointing out that which was substantially repeated in substantially all the newspapers of the United States yesterday morning; not always in the text of the article, but sometimes in that insidious and dangerous approach upon libel and slander called the "headlines," but generally, at least in substance, now adopted in all of the newspapers:

Our latter-day statesmen never dream of adopting that motto from "Eikon Basilike," "More than the law gives me I would not have." They choose rather to pervert an old proverb by asserting that he who steals an egg without being caught is justified in stealing an ox. When men of the standing of Congressman HILL of Connecticut, Senator CULLOM, Speaker CANNON (that watchdog of the Treasury), Congressman PAYNE of New York, and HEPBURN of Iowa are taken red-handed, no one can marvel that Beavers, Machen, and the small fry of Department subordinates rush for loot, with the cry, "Now or never!"

That is from a paper that generally is one of the conservative publications in the United States, and this is an editorial on its editorial page, and is in substance and effect in accord with 95 per cent of the press of the country to-day. And the question, Mr. Speaker, that comes home to us, and comes in a form that can not be answered but in one way, What are we going to do about it? Treat it as a matter of indifference? Treat it with levity? Treat it as though it was a matter of no concern, or shall we do that which the sound judgment of this House must demand—force to the wall the libelant—force the libelant to take it back?

Mr. Speaker, what is this paper here for? What does that document mean; what was its purpose? Has the country wrongly construed the presence of this infamous document in this House? Has this House, with the serious faces that I see about me, misunderstood the purpose and purport of that document? Is this a little, trifling matter thrown in here by the understanding of somebody who does not know any better? Or is it a designedly willful and malicious libel upon 191 members of the House and Senate? Libels do not always have to speak out a charge of crime, Mr. OVERSTREET; it is not necessary.

Let us review the circumstances of the country a few months past. A discovery was said to have been made, and was made, as it turns out, that in two divisions of the Post-Office Department there was wrong going on. I submit that the investigation that the gentleman from Indiana took nearly an hour in apologizing for is an outrage, in violation of every principle of American jurisprudence. [Applause.] When was a Department officer of this Government transformed of his own motion into a grand jury? And if it shall be answered, as it may be, perhaps, that it was wise and judicious to have an investigation carried on through the Department by the inspectors of the Department, and if the answer is in accord with the suggestion, let me return the answer—what right had that document to be published to the American people before action of any tribunal had settled the truth of it, a mere ex parte statement, unsupported by any evidence whatever, put out with a great flourish of trumpets that has been followed by every imaginable attempt to pervert public opinion and turn aside public justice?

I am a lawyer, and I believe I know what the law of my country requires, and I know that the testimony given before a grand jury was never in any civilized country permitted to be published in the newspapers for the purpose of persuading the jury that was to try the case afterwards.

Now, then, what next? I have asked what is the purpose of this document, and what is it here for? Can any man give an answer that will put respectability upon that paper? What is it here for? It is here for some purpose. It is here to convince the American people of something. What is it? Is it here as a mere report containing nothing, as the gentleman from Indiana says—meaning nothing; having no purpose, no effect—a mere brutum fulmen? I guess not. It comes at a time when the public nerve of this country is acute with the pain of the disclosures of the rascalities in the Post-Office Department. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It comes at a time when a resolution has been offered on the other side of this House in substance and effect charging wrongdoing, as the Member well might.

I am not criticising the gentleman from Virginia. In answer to that, this document comes into this House. In answer to that, without the slighest intimation of its purpose, this document comes in here and is published to the world—as our friends on the other side will say, dragged out of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I deny that. It comes here legitimately from that committee, and comes here as the committee, in my judgment, had a right to bring it and ought to have brought it, and could not have done less than brought it under the circumstances of the case. But in answer to the letter of the chairman of the committee that called upon the Post-Office Department for certain information, what right had that document to come here? The purpose of the letter was to furnish evidence for or against the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia, which in its series of preambles, in effect, charged wrongdoing. And the letter of the chairman of the committee must be construed as conforming to that and asking of the Post-Office Department, "What have you got now that will support these charges of wrongdoing and rascality? What have you got? Let us have all that you have got that charges wrongdoing upon Members of the House of Representatives." And thereupon comes this document. And I am answering my own question.

It came here with a deliberate, cold-blooded, and malicious intent to cast upon this Congress the stain of having 151 dishonest Members, and a large number in the Senate. And you may go and wash in all the pools of forgetfulness this side of Siloam and you will never wash the impression out of the public minds of the people of the United States. That is what it was done for. It was done for no other purpose.

When these newspapers broke out all over the United States with a scream, with a cry, on the day before yesterday, why did not somebody go and publish—we have a great many interviews these days—why did not somebody go and say it was never intended that 151 Members of the House of Representatives should be smirched by that report?

Now, I do not care to have anything that is personal grow out of this matter. I care nothing about anything that has been said about me. I was glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] say that he defied criticism of himself at home. They may take all they have said about me and publish it in every household in my Congressional district, and I will defy any man to take one vote from me by reason thereof.

But let me show you the infinite rascality of this report. [Laughter.] Here is a report about a little village in one of the counties of my Congressional district. Now, I leave it to any fair-minded man, first, to answer me why that was put in here; and, second, why was not the truth told plainly?

South Bloomingville, Ohio, February 27, 1900: Upon the recommendation of Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR the allowance for separating clerk hire at this office was fixed at $50 per annum from April 1, 1900.

Report of the postmaster, dated February 8, 1900, showed he was entitled to this amount.

March 28, 1900. Allowance was increased from $50 to $230 from April 1, 1900. Nothing to show who recommended this increase.

The author of that document was called upon to tell what Members of Congress had secured increases of clerk hire. That is what he was asked for, and he showed a reduction at the post-office in my district, and said he did not know who did it. What did he send it here for? That is enough for any fair-minded man to know in estimating the character of this publication.

Then comes the city of Nelsonville, and in regard to that I shall, with the leave of the House, publish every word that this document shows; and if there is one man on the Democratic side of this House, or on the Republican side, who will say that I did anything improper, that I pressed anything too hard, that there is one thing in the whole of that correspondence that criticises me as a business man, as a lawyer, as a gentleman, as a Congressman, I will resign my seat to-morrow; and if nothing of that kind can be found, I condemn the man who sent that into this House for some purpose.

A MEMBER. He ought to resign himself.

The printed matter referred to by Mr. GROSVENOR is as follows:

NELSONVILLE, OHIO.

In 1900 salary of the postmaster at this place was $1,600, with an allowance of $175 rental and $54 for fuel and light.

The following is taken from the brief on papers bearing upon this office:

"May 13, 1901. P. M. incloses a demand from owner of room for increase in rent to $300 per annum."

"May 15. Wrote P. M. look for other quarters."

"June 5. P. M. reports no vacant rooms in the city that would meet the requirements; there might be one or two vacant next fall which will rent for $25 or $30 per month. Agent for present P. O room has an applicant who will pay $30, but says (agent) will lease present room for one or four years to Department for $300 per annum."

"June 11. Wrote P. M. re other quarters and report."

"September 18, 1901. Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR states this is an important office. He states that P. M. can make a contract for present room at $20 per month, which is not half what the property can be rented for for business purposes, and he (GROSVENOR) asks that P. M. be authorized through him to make this arrangement. Lease G. W. B."

"October 3, 1901. Wrote Hon. GROSVENOR $240 rent would be allowed from October 1."

"December 20, 1902. Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR refers letter of P. M., who states present premises in bad condition; plastering is falling and floor is in bad shape, and is too small for accommodation of business; have asked owner to repair premises and he refuses; two parties are erecting business blocks, one nearer the depot, who offers to equip room with modern fixtures and lease to Department for term of ten years at small increase in allowance for rent, fuel, and light, and Hon. GROSVENOR recommends favorable action."

"December 27, 1902. Wrote Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR inclosing circular re change of site. If satisfactory terms submitted and change indorsed by patrons, P. M. will be authorized to move post-office."

"January 19, 1903. Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR called and urged prompt action re better quarters for post-office."

On May 13, 1901, the postmaster wrote to the Postmaster-General as follows:

"NELSONVILLE, OHIO, May 13, 1901.

"Hon. POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: I inclose you notice I received this morning from agent of building which is occupied by post-office; also letter which I received February 18, demanding increase in the rent. He is now allowed $175 per year. He says he must have $300 or we must vacate the room. An early reply as to what I shall do in the matter will be appreciated.

"Very respectfully,

"JAS. T. SHEPPARD, Postmaster."

On May 15, 1901, the Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General wrote to the postmaster as follows:

"In reply to your letter of the 13th instant, with inclosure, relative to vacating present post-office premises or paying increase for rent, you are advised that you should look for other quarters for the office and report your action before making any change, and the matter will be further considered.

"You should have protected yourself with a written contract when you assumed charge of the office, in order to avoid such a demand.

"You may be obliged to pay the increase in rent demanded by owner of premises."

On June 5, 1901, the postmaster wrote to the First Assistant Postmaster-General as follows:

"Pursuant to instructions from you, I have looked for new quarters for office. There is not a vacant room in the city that would meet the requirements for office. There will no doubt be one or two rooms for rent in the fall—nothing definite. They will rent for $25 or $30 a month. Mr. Poston, the agent for the room we now occupy, has always been very fair with us, and has rented at an extremely low rate. He now has an applicant who offers $30 a month. He has asked us $25, and will lease for one or four years. The room is conveniently located for all the patrons of the office. I think the Department should allow him more rent than he is now receiving. He is now allowed $175 per year, which he thinks entirely too little. What shall I do about this matter? An early reply will be greatly appreciated."

On June 11, 1901, the First Assistant Postmaster-General wrote the postmaster as follows:

"The allowance for rent is made to assist postmasters in third-class post-offices to procure satisfactory quarters for post-office purposes. It is not intended that the Department is obliged to pay the full rental value of premises, especially where postmasters do not elect to protect themselves with a written contract.

"You should endeavor to secure a less expensive room in which to conduct your office, and report what can be done before taking any action in regard to change in site."

Under date of September 18, 1901, Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR wrote a letter as follows:

ATHENS, OHIO, September 18, 1901.

Hon. W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Nelsonville post-office is a large one and a very important one, and I find there is an unpleasant situation there. It appears that there was a verbal contract of rent when Mr. Shepard took the office, at a very low figure. Nelsonville is the largest town in the county of Athens, nearly double the size of our town here, and has a large public square around which the business is transacted, and the post-office must be situated on this square. Mr. Shepard can make a contract for his post-office at $20 per month, which is not half what the property can be rented for for business purposes, and I wish there could be authority sent to him, through me, authorizing him to make the contract for a certain number of years at $20. I think this can be done if done at an early date.

Yours, truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

Under date of October 3, 1901, the Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General wrote to Mr. GROSVENOR as follows:

"Replying to your letter of the 18th ultimo, relative to increase in allowance for post-office premises at Nelsonville, Ohio, I beg to advise you that the present allowance of $175 will be increased to $240 per annum, effective October 1, 1901, with the understanding that the postmaster will protect himself with a written contract for a term of years on basis of this allowance.

"This action is in accordance with your recommendation."

Under date of November 8, 1902, the postmaster wrote to Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR as follows:

"Some time in August Mr. Sisson and I spoke to you about our present post-office, and you told me to come home and write you the particulars.

"The room we now occupy is unfit for the office. The plastering is falling in, the floor is in bad shape, and the town has entirely outgrown my present fixtures. I could rent at least 300 more boxes if I had them. In addition to this, the room is unsafe. There is no protection whatever against burglars. I have asked Mr. Poston, who lives in Logan, Ohio, to repair office, and he refuses to do so at present. We have two different parties who are building business blocks here, one nearer the depot than the present site, who offer to put in modern, up-to-date fixtures, tile floor, etc., if the Department will lease room at a small increase over what they now allow for rent and lease the room from five to ten years. The town is improving every day. New buildings going up and general improvements. The citizens feel * * * ."

Under date of December 20, 1902, Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR wrote letter as follows:

"Mr. GEORGE W. BEAVERS, Post-Office Department:

"MY DEAR SIR: I send you the letter of Mr. Sheppard, the postmaster at Nelsonville, Ohio. It is a disgrace to the United States Government that in a town like Nelsonville, the largest town in the county, there should be such inferior accommodations for the post-office. I am ashamed to look the people of the town in the face. Can you help me out in this matter in any way? A little piece of the letter is lost, but that does not change the sense of it all."

Under date of December 27, 1902, the Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General wrote to Mr. GROSVENOR as follows:

"Replying to your letter of the 20th instant, forwarding a communication from the postmaster at Nelsonville, Ohio, regarding the question of securing more suitable quarters for the post-office at that place, I inclose a circular letter for report from the postmaster regarding proposed change. If satisfactory terms are submitted, and the change will be indorsed by principal patrons of post-office, the postmaster will no doubt be authorized to move post-office as requested."

Under date of January 19, 1903, the Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General wrote Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR as follows:

"Referring to your visit to the Department to-day in regard to securing better quarters for the post-office at Nelsonville, Ohio, I have the honor to advise you that Mr. Guy T. Gould, an assistant superintendent of the salary and allowance division, has been directed to visit Nelsonville at his earliest convenience with a view of securing satisfactory quarters, properly equipped with boxes, fixtures, and furniture, under a lease for a term of years.

"Upon receipt of Mr. Gould's report I will advise you."

Under date of January 29, 1903, Assistant Superintendent Gould wrote to Mr. George W. Beavers as follows:

"I have a letter dated January 20, from Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, M. C., stating that you would assign to me a case bearing upon Nelsonville, Ohio, for investigation. I have no such case as yet."

Under date of February 9, 1903, Assistant Superintendent Gould submitted report of his investigation, in which he states:

"I have secured herewith proposition from Thomas S. Barron to erect new premises just a block from the present quarters, for a room 20 by 63, reserving in the lobby 7 by 12 feet in front for use of news stand, at an annual rental of $420, to include new equipment, heat, light, fire and burglar proof safe, water, etc.

"The office is of the third grade. The postmaster's salary is $1,700. I heartily recommend the acceptance of this proposition at once. The premises are to be ready by June 1, 1903."

Under date of February 26, 1903, a letter was written to Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR as follows:

"Referring to the matter of securing better quarters for the post-office at Nelsonville, Ohio, I beg to advise you that it has been decided to accept the proposition of Mr. Thomas S. Barron to erect and equip a room for this purpose, in accordance with the recommendation of Assistant Superintendent Gould. The postmaster has been advised accordingly."

On an envelope in this file there appears a memorandum as follows:

"February 24, 1903. Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR called, and says no other bid will be submitted, and recommends action.

"C. P. G.
"G. W. B."

The following is taken from the brief of papers in this file:

"November 16, 1903. Allowed $420 for R., F., and L. from July 1, 1903."

Mr. GROSVENOR. What did he send that here for? There is nothing about the lease. The lease of the house is confessedly away below what it ought to be. The necessity for the new house is admitted by everybody, their own agent especially. What did he send it in here for?

He points out again that in the town of Gloucester the clerk hire was cut down on some occasion, but he forgets to tell that there was a distinct change in the whole manipulation of the lines of carrying there. He has failed to mention that, and then he does not say that I had anything to do with it. Again, I ask, what was that done for?

Again, in the little post-office of Hazael, in Meigs County, Ohio, he puts the fact that there was a clerk hire of $100, and that it was reduced, and then puts my name opposite to it, but does not say that I had anything to do with it, and I never did have anything to do with it, as I remember. But, gentlemen, I want to call your attention—I will not stop to read it—to the original report made on December 15, 1903, by the Postmaster-General, on pages 134 and 135. Take up now the case of Conyer, in the State of Georgia. You will find there about as strong a case as there is in the whole of this pretended assault upon Congress. You will find that a count was ordered and the report showed the office entitled to $160 per annum. Then you will find that only $100, however, was allowed.

Then you will find that the Congressman called personally, and as a result the allowance was increased to $820. Then the increase of $720 was paid to a clerk recommended by the Congressman. After a while that clerk went out of office and the pay was again cut down. Now, take this report that is called for by Mr. OVERSTREET's letter and tell me where Connors post-office appears? There is a cut down from $850 to $160, and there is no reference to the gentleman who manipulated that. In other words, it is not mentioned in this book anywhere.

Now go to another one, to Port Deposit, in the State of Maryland. There you will find an outcry showing an increase in the allowance of $500. Ethel W. Colvin was designated as the clerk at that salary. On February 17 he was advised that the increase had been authorized to take effect March 1. On February 27, the postmaster having refused to appoint Miss Colvin, the Congressman wrote stating that fact and suggesting that the allowance be reduced to $60, which was immediately done. Now take that and hunt for Port Deposit in that report, and find it if you can. Then tell me what the meaning of all this is. What is it done for? Why was it done, and for what purpose was it done?

I do not care to go further. Here are 151 Members of this House, past and present, put into a list that was drawn out of the Post-Office Department upon a request made by the Post-Office Committee of this House that the men that had done something that they were being censured for should be named, that man's name among others.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman referred to Port Deposit, Md. It is in this latter report, but not charged to the Congressman, but to the post-office inspector.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is an explanation that ought to be made. In the original report it was charged against the Congressman that the change was made upon the recommendation of the Congressman, both up and down, but in the tabulated statement in this latter report the fault is laid at the door of somebody by the name of Maxwell, said to be an inspector of the Post-Office Department.

Now, that is the sort of a document that is injected into the minds, the knowledge, and observation of the American people just on the eve of a Presidential election, and if the injury could only fall upon the men who brought the trouble here I would not say one word in extenuation. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] has sized it up precisely. It had furnished the storehouse, replenished and full of ammunition, for every blackmailer and every criticiser of the Congress. What would you do now? This is said to be a very trifling matter, not a matter of any special importance at all, but I should like to see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], in one of the wards of the city of Indianapolis, meet a great big crowd of people while making a speech defending the Republican party and the House of Representatives and the legislation of this body, and have sombody hold that up and ask him, "What do you think of that?"

How long do you think that audience would stand while he was explaining away that they had a committee, and the committee made a report, and part of the committee said it meant one thing and part of the committee said it meant another thing, and they concluded just to drop it and run away from it and say they were all honest men? Can any self-respecting Congressman ever again write a letter to go into the hands of the men who will treat these letters in this way? Can any self-respecting Congressman ever enter the office of a man who will produce such a document as that? It is not a trifling matter, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, and there is not one of you who does not feel, whether your name is on this, as we call it, "roll of honor," or whether it has been omitted because you have come too recently into Congress [laughter], there is not one of you who does not feel to-day that a great, crying, infinite wrong has been done against an innocent body of self-respecting gentlemen of your country. There is not a Democrat on this floor, whether his name is mentioned in that book or not, who does not feel that a wrong has been done and done against the body and done against the United States of America, and it will go and be translated and printed in every known language of the world, to show the people of foreign countries that the American Congress had in it 151 rascals in a single Congress. That is what it means, or it does not mean anything.

Take the horn of the dilemma that you please, and the gentleman who got it up and perpetrated it will not have to repeat the prayer or appeal that Dogberry closed his service as a magistrate with, as described by Mr. Shakespeare. He has written himself down, and he need not appeal to his friends to do it. [Laughter.]

What are the duties of a Congressman? Is there disclosed in that book—aside from those three real estate transactions, which I by no means condemn, and which the Department never did condemn, for they never canceled the leases; and that is the answer to the whole of it; if anybody has been implicated by those leases, the Post-Office Department is particeps criminis to the wrong, for it has continued the leases, as I understand, and is going straight ahead with them——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will my friend permit an interruption right there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The time is up.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is one case up there where it is not only true that the Department never canceled the lease, but the only manner in which the gentleman's name became connected with this report is that, having first made a lease to the Department and being subsequently elected a Senator of the United States, and being apprised of the law, he went down to the Department and requested that his lease be canceled, and they declined to do it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That was the case of a Member——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Senator OVERMAN of North Carolina——

Mr. GROSVENOR. And that was exactly the case in——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And then it was explained by the Department that the law did not apply to him, because the lease was made before he was a Senator.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And that same thing——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If he had not been oversensitive about the observance of the law, and gone down to cancel the lease, he would not have been in this book. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not. I beg a moment or two more, and then I am through.

What is the duty of a Congressman? Why, what is the duty? It seems to me I have been spending a great deal of idle time or wrongfully spending my time if it is not the duty of a Congressman to help his constituents in every matter of this character. It is his duty to give his opinion; and if the Post-Office Department has got some scoundrel there whose judgment is to be warped or broken down by the judgment of a Congressman, they had better turn him out. [Laughter and applause.] I think the judgment of this House of Representatives, in gross or in detail, would be a wonderful advantage to the Post-Office Department in a great many of their performances down there. [Laughter and applause.] What are we here for [great laughter], in the language of one Flannigan, of Texas? [Renewed laughter.] Why are we here? Why, since the time that I have been a Member of this House I have sent more than 5,000 documents to the Pension Office. I have not made a very profound impression upon that organization yet. [Laughter.] But I am giving my opinion that a man ought to get a greater rate of pension.

Now, is it possible that some day, when somebody wants to attack somebody, that they will drag out of that Pension Office every recommendation that I and all the rest of you have made touching the subject of pensions. Would that be possible? And yet that is just exactly as justifiable and proper as the attack made here upon Congressmen for having recommended that there be an increase or reduction of pay of a clerk or that there be a new lease of a post-office or a change in the post-office.

What is it here for?

I quit where I began. I say that the purpose and intent of that document can have no other effect. It was born for that purpose. "It was conceived in sin and born in iniquity," and it has traveled its guilty course until it has struck the public of the United States as a great attack upon a body of men which I believe in all sincerity as free from wrongdoing, corruption, crime, or irregularity of conduct as any equal number of men on the face of the earth. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to proceed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can go on if the gentleman prefers. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY].

Mr. LILLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few facts that should, but do not, appear in connection with the use of my name in this report. Having stated these facts, I am content that my fellow-Members, my constituents, and the public at large shall form their own conclusions as to whether there has been anything reprehensible in my conduct.

The Winsted, Station A, post-office was located in the Beardsley Block when I purchased it. When the lease expired last spring, J. M. White, assistant superintendent of the salaries and allowance division, called upon me and stated that he was unable to find a satisfactory location, and asked me if I would not be willing to lease the property to a third party, Mr. C. S. Newcomb. He would then negotiate with him. I replied that if it was satisfactory to the Government I would lease to Mr. Newcomb at the same price that the Government had heretofore paid, namely, $350.

Mr. White corresponded with the Department and then notified me that such an arrangement was satisfactory. Thereupon I leased the property to Mr. Newcomb. Afterwards I learned through Mr. White that the Government had negotiated with Mr. Newcomb for a five-year lease, and that in addition to the privileges they had heretofore enjoyed Mr. Newcomb entered into agreement to furnish heat and light, substantially a new equipment, and to make certain additions, renovations, and repairs, at a cost equal to a yearly rental of $175 for these five years.

Quoting from Mr. Bristow's report: "The rent is practically the same as under the former lease." Mr. Bristow further says that he referred to this case not because there was any fraud indicated in the transaction.

In reference to Torrington, no impropriety is mentioned in the Bristow report. The facts are that during the seven and a half years ending January 1, 1904, the Government has paid me in gross rental $2,500, and I have furnished in equipment, heat, and light more than $4,000, so that in this case I have received nothing for my store, which would have rented for mercantile purposes at $1,000 per year, but am out $1,500. In other words, I have paid the United States Government for the privilege of having its post-office in my building during those seven and a half years $9,000.

This Torrington lease was made before I ever thought of becoming a candidate for the honor of representing Connecticut in this House, and within twenty-four hours of the time when I discovered that there was a clause in the statutes which might be construed as affecting my standing as a Member of this body, I came to Washington, called upon First Assistant Postmaster-General Wynne, and requested a cancellation of my lease. Mr. Wynne replied to me that he did not think this would be necessary, but would consult Assistant Attorney-General Robb and notify me at my hotel as soon as he had obtained his opinion.

In the course of one or two days I received a request to call at Mr. Wynne's office, to which I immediately responded, and was told by Mr. Wynne that this statute had no bearing whatever on my case. (This statute was passed in 1808. In 1809 the then Attorney-General of the United States, the Hon. C. A. Rodney, rendered an opinion that where a lease had existed prior to the becoming a Congressman of any member of Congress the lease was not invalid. Though far-fetched, perhaps, the principal basis for this opinion seems to be that there might occur cases in which it would be to the advantage of a man owning property which was leased to the Government at much less than he could get from some other party to get himself elected to Congress and thus invalidate the lease.

Assistant Attorney-General Robb states as his opinion that a lease, legal when made, can not be changed in status by the lessor becoming a member of Congress. And the holding of property by a Congressman under these conditions is not even a technical violation of the statute.)

And at my request a letter was written to me, which, in closing, I will read.

HON. GEORGE L. LILLEY,
Waterbury, Conn.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the memorandum prepared by Mr. White, the assistant superintendent of the salary and allowances division, stationed at Boston, in which is quoted an act of Congress on contracts between the Government and a Member of Congress, I find that the statute cited has no bearing whatever on your case as stated to me.

The contract between the Post-Office Department and yourself for the use of certain quarters in Torrington for postal purposes was made before your election. I am informed by the law officer of this Department that a contract made by the proper officer of the Government with a person who, during the existence of same, is elected a Member of Congress, is not affected by such election.

This declaration is based upon an opinion to be found in volume 5, Opinions of Attorney-General, page 697. That opinion was rendered by the Hon. C. A. Rodney in 1809, one year after the passage of the act of Congress referred to, and to which Mr. White called your attention. It is unnecessary for me to quote that opinion, which may be found by reference to the volume indicated. In that opinion you will discover that there is no need for this Department to take any notice of your election, so far as it relates to the contract with you as the owner of the Torrington property occupied as the post-office.

Having officially called attention to your doubts on the subject, and having had the subject investigated, I take great pleasure in writing this letter at your request. The lease is in effect. The rent will be paid to you or your agent.

Very sincerely,
R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

OCTOBER, 1903.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, five minutes will not give a man against whom there appears an indictment containing six counts very long time in which to defend himself, but such time as the gentleman has given me I propose to employ to the best of my ability. I have never quite understood all the duties of a Representative in this House until this report appeared. Now I conceive one of them to be a very singular and conspicuous inactivity. For seven years I have spoken for my people when requested, and as long as they permit me to stay here, thereby intrusting me with the responsibility, I will continue to speak, whether Mr. Bristow should be at home or abroad. [Applause.] Between my constituents and this Post Office Department I prefer to commit myself to my constituents, who have always been fair, having never failed in their patience or shown an unwillingness to listen. There have been in my district postmasters serving many years and who have never been allowed one cent of compensation for separating mails. I discovered their rights and insisted with the Department that they should be squarely treated. Why were they not informed of them by the Department authorities and their allowances made without the necessity of Congressional interference or intercession?

One old man, living within 3 miles of the town in which I live, for forty years has been a postmaster and had separated mails all that time. I requested the Department to count his mail, and it was discovered that he had earned and was entitled all these years to $70 each year.

During these forty years of service to his Government he had not asked for compensation, because he was ignorant of his right that entitled him to it, and I suppose the bureau officer, whose duty it was to impart the information, justifies his failure by the uncomplaining spirit manifested by the postmaster. If this progressive old gentleman had depended alone upon the supposedly unfailing, automatically working justice of the Government, he would be left to-day without more to sustain him than the recollection of a well-spent life and the wish found in the motto: "God bless our happy home." [Applause.]

I shall continue, notwithstanding the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, to go to the Department upon legitimate errands, and those whose duty it may be to listen to the demands of my constituents will not close the doors with me on the outside of them or terrorize me from the performance of a plain duty by publishing but a part of what I may say or write upon the subject of my errand. What my constituents are entitled to have they shall have, Bristow or no Bristow. [Applause.] I never asked for anything more, and it is cowardly to assail me under such a cover as is presented in this report. My description of the act applies to the author and the finisher of this remarkable document, man or mouse. On the last page of this exhibit I am charged by an inference with having secured a renewal of the lease of the Coatesville post-office at an increased rate.

If gentlemen see fit to read—I would not recommend them to do it, because I have not read any part of this report except that referring to me [laughter], and therefore would not recommend them to read this—you may find yourselves sufficiently employed to read the part of this solemn document that refers to yourselves [laughter]. I received the remonstrance of nearly 150 business men from the borough of Coatesville, protesting against the removal of the post-office site. Was it my place to have the protest presented? Yes; and it received the attention of the Department. If it had been sent to the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, it would have been acted upon promptly, for no one has ever said that Bristow lacks diligence. I insisted that my constituents should be heard, and in this I was successful.

The history of my connection with this affair is this, and I had no other: When this great protest reached me I paid a visit to the place, so that I might be the better informed whether those protesting were in earnest or had only signified their wishes in order to be polite or accommodating. After satisfying myself of the earnestness of the protestors, by letter and telegram, I insisted that an inspector should be returned to the place to learn of the people where the location should be made to best accommodate them, as well as to conserve the interests of the Government. The inspector was returned and made his report upon conditions as he found them. In this report he states he called upon me, but that I told him I did not care to have anything to do with settling the controversy, preferring to leave it to the wisdom of those interested to determine.

The inspector further reports that he made his recommendation after examination only. Why were these facts not cited in the report made to this House? This is not one of the cases called for by the committee. Then why was it reported with nothing but my letters and telegrams, together with the garbled conclusion drawn by the responsible person? I do not complain of the disclosure of my correspondence upon this or any other subject; but I do object to the design of the person who only selects a part of a record which seems to suit a purpose not entirely concealed. In this case, as well as in all others affecting my relations with the Post-Office Department, I except not to that which is published, but criticise those who failed to publish the whole record, as well as conclusions and inferences not justified by admitted facts.

This officer succeeded in reducing the rent asked $225. I helped the Government to this extent, and where is my credit? I am afraid that this one meritorious act of mine, having appeared on the last page of the book, it may be lost. Therefore I will have it put in the RECORD, so it may be bound and secure. In a letter addressed to me on this very same post-office, the writer says:

DEAR SIR: Upon the recommendation of Assistant Superintendent Norris, the Department has decided to renew the lease of the post-office premises at Coatesville, Pa. I trust this is satisfactory to you.

This is signed "First Assistant Postmaster-General."

My clients got what they were entitled to have—a full and additional hearing—and they will continue to get it if I know how to help them. [Laughter and applause.]

A MEMBER. You mean "constituents."

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I mean my constituents.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Of the renewal of the lease at Westchester—please be kind enough to turn to the bottom of page 173—I know nothing whatever. I did not know that the lease to the Westchester post-office had expired until the postmaster at that point told me inspectors were looking for another site and had failed to find it. I did not know that there was any controversy over it. I was never consulted about it, and Bristow says so in this report. He merely finds a memorandum in the record to refer to me. I did not know when the lease was renewed. I did not know the terms of the lease. I had heard that two inspectors had traveled the town over for two days endeavoring to find another site, and failed.

I was called upon at Westchester six or nine months ago by two post-office inspectors (so new their boots still squeaked), who had a record touching this lease, in which there appeared the words "Hold for Congressman BUTLER." They inquired of my relation to this renewal, and I informed them, as I have informed the House, that I knew nothing whatever of the subject, and had nothing to do with it, directly or indirectly. I had no information for them, because I had none. I further told them that neither Beavers nor anyone else had ever spoken to me on the subject beyond the postmaster (who was present at this interview), when he informed me of the ineffectual attempt to find another site. These two young inspectors (or one of them) then said if they had been hunting for a site in Westchester they would have put the mail in the street before they would have made such a lease. The interview then took on some spirit, and I remember saying: "In which case you would have been put from the town."

I do not know whether the rent is excessive for so much accommodation. The business was not at that time mine, and is not now. Those responsible may settle the question. On page 45 you will find a place called Berwyn, Pa., where the salary allowance was increased. In this report it is said there is no evidence that I had anything to do with it. It is in my district. The author of this report says I was informed. I don't know whether I was or not. I imagine if I was I sent the formal notification to the postmaster.

I do remember in this case that some one, and I assume it was the postmaster at the point, informed me that there should be an allowance made for the separation of mail at his office. I further remember that upon one occasion during a session of Congress I was in the Post-Office Department and called the attention of Mr. Beavers, or some one in his office at the time, to the fact that the postmaster at Berwyn requested an allowance for separating service, and I wished he would look into the situation to see whether the allowance could be made, and if so for as much as the postmaster should receive.

I have no further knowledge touching this case except that I am advised by the record that I was notified some time later that upon my recommendation the allowance of $500 was made. I did not know then, neither do I know now, whether that was the usual allowance to make at Berwyn. I don't know whether it had ever been allowed prior to this time. It is perfectly plain that the appropriation of money at this point for the separation of mail was legitimate and within the rules of the Department. The amount to be appropriated was not for me to settle. The Department had its own rule, unknown to any except to officers, for fixing the proper amount. I see by the record that a further count of the mails showed that the allowance was excessive and was therefore reduced. In one place in this report it is shown that the allowance was discontinued. That is not true; it was only reduced. Furthermore, it is shown by this report that it is an open question whether or not the amount was excessive at the time. Of this I know nothing, and it was not my business to ascertain. That responsibility was upon another, whom I assume performed it to the best of his ability. I notice further that the record states this to have been a summer resort. This appears in a lead-pencil memorandum on the record not in my handwriting. While Berwyn has many visitors in the summer, I did not ask for the allowance because of increased work or unusual business.

Following the idea of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN], it seems to have been the studied attempt to include everything that tends to the disadvantage of the Member without disclosing what he really did or said in the premises. The purpose seems to be to do some one in some way some hurt. The third point spoken of in this report is Downingtown, Pa., where an increased allowance for clerk hire is said to have been made upon my recommendation. The rule of this House requires such a statement to be denied parliamentarily, if denied at all; therefore, under restraint, I only say that this statement is not true. I answer these indirections found in this report so as to satisfy the country how unfair this whole report is, not only tending in a covert way to defame me, but as well every Member of this House, by connecting our names with those who are at this time convicted of crime.

I have no criticism to make of Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow for any act of his life, personal or official, except the one which we are now considering. It is a pleasure to join with the whole country in commending him for the good he has done. But while on the track of those who may have done wrong he should not forget that even innocent people are sometimes found upon the same highway where guilty ones may be. Yet General Bristow does not seem to intend to injure anyone by this report, because this sentence is found in his letter to the chairman of the Post-Office Committee of the House:

In this connection it is proper to say that in a large majority of cases which have already been examined where the increase was made upon the recommendation of a Member of Congress the recommendation of the Member appears to have been simply formal, and shows upon its face that he expected the executive officer to allow only what the office was entitled to under the law and rules of the Department.

I quote this part of General Bristow's letter at this time because it entirely covers the case upon which I am about to comment. An examination of the Post-Office record in the Downingtown case shows that on January 30, 1903, I wrote a letter to George W. Beavers, inclosing a long communication from the postmaster at Downingtown, in which he stated that he was paying more for clerk hire than he was receiving from the Government. He further said that he had just made a count of his mail, and believed that he was entitled to an increase. In my letter I called the attention of Mr. Beavers to this count, and said to him that I wished he would give the postmaster at Downingtown an additional allowance, if, quoting the exact language in my letter, "you can find in the report enough that will warrant you in giving it to him." The salary allowance was increased, and I assume it was increased because the business of the post-office warranted it.

Why was not this letter of mine containing the language quoted here included in the report made to this House? It is not one of the cases asked for by the Post-Office Committee; therefore, why was it included, except for some purpose that is not apparent on the face of the report? Why did not this report say that I had recommended the postmaster should have what his record showed him entitled to have and no more? This is my act. The conclusion of him who made this report is either carelessly drawn or purposely incorrect.

At Kennett Square, Pa., referred to on page 47 of this report, is found the memorandum of its author that the allowance of $500 for clerk hire was restored upon my recommendation. The record of the Department shows that this office had had this allowance many years and that it was discontinued in January, 1901. I was informed of this fact at the time of its discontinuance by the postmaster, who requested me to have the salary restored if possible. Knowing the heavy and accumulating business at Kennett Square, I went to the Department, informed Mr. Beavers of the wish of the postmaster, and, I have no doubt, supplemented the wish of the postmaster with my own. I know I did not get a definite answer that day, because Mr. Beavers had to examine the situation before he could reply. At a later date I received a letter stating that the clerk-hire salary had been restored. I sent the letter to the postmaster, and have no further knowledge of the facts.

The author of this report is so much in doubt about the impropriety of the restoration of this salary that he himself raises the question. It may have been restored without authority at the time, or it may have been with authority. I do not know what justified the restoration. I did not inquire at the time. I only knew the salary had been allowed at this point, knew for some reason not stated to me that it was discontinued, and followed this information with the request for a restoration. The reasons for allowing this salary were sufficient at one time to secure it; these reasons were, of course, of record. I did not know them. They concerned the Department and not me.

The last case cited in which my name is mentioned is that of Newtown Square, Pa. In a conversation with the postmaster at that point he informed me of the increase of business at Newtown Square during certain periods of the year and asked me to ascertain whether it would be possible for him to obtain an allowance for clerk hire during those periods. I subsequently saw some one in Mr. Beaver's office (presumably him) and stated the wishes of the postmaster. At this time I remember inquiring about how much could be allowed for such an office. An examination of the record of the office was made, when it was determined the sum usually allowed for similar services was about $150. The person with whom I talked informed me that such allowance could only be made upon application of the postmaster, setting forth the conditions. I notified the postmaster of this. He addressed such letter to the Department and sent it to me. I forwarded it, with the request that he be allowed $150, calling Mr. Beavers's attention to my conversation.

This allowance was made upon the written request of the postmaster, which I forwarded and which I urged might be made. It was proper at the time because the condition of business warranted it. It was only intended to be a temporary allowance, to be discontinued at such time as the shrinkage of business would demand. The authority for the allowance in this case is found in the Postal Laws and Regulations, section 309: "Whenever unusual business accrues at any post-office the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical services." The inquiry in my mind is, Why did not the compiler of this report include the letter of the postmaster, setting out the conditions of his post-office which warranted the authorities to make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical services?

Nothing more was done in the case than that which the authorities had a full right to do, and no complaint is made in this report that the salary was excessive, only discontinued, it is stated, because no separating service was performed. It was never stated that there was any separating service at this point, and the reason for discontinuance was that the state of business at the point no longer warranted the salary.

I have spoken of my relation to these cases and mean now to speak for my constituents, who are all honest, faithful officials who have at no time made the least attempt to impose upon the Government in order to obtain additional compensation for either themselves or their clerks. They have been truthful in all their statements made to the Department upon the affairs of their offices, and I invite either this House or any Government official to examine every connection which they may have had with the subjects under consideration. Some of these postmasters are now defraying a part of the expenses necessary to a satisfactory conduct of their offices out of their private funds. This is a wrong which can not be righted until Congress passes a law allowing third-class postmasters clerk hire, as is now allowed for second-class offices.

The custom practiced by Members of Congress related in this report has existed since the foundation of the Government. It will be observed as long as the present form of government exists and as long as the disposition to oblige remains a part of human conditions. Every man in this House esteems it a pleasure to speak for those he represents and to see that even justice is at all times meted out to them. If the Member does not interest himself for his constituents, who will? We consider our constituents our families, to whom our minds in almost fondness turn.

Oftentimes a complaint comes that the business has not received the attention it requires. Who is there to make the inquiry if the Member refuses? Who will present the constituent's side to a bureau chief if the Member declines? Is the bureau chief in the habit of listening long to complaints made by those in private life? Must your constituent hire a lawyer or messenger every time he has business for the consideration of a Department? Such little offices have always been and always will be performed by the Member. It is a part of his pleasures of life to take care of those who have taken care of him, and these are his constituents. This flare of red flags will not frighten us from the performance of acts of kindness for our people at home. There is nothing wrong in all this, and the Department offers this opinion unasked for. It is the manner in which these acts spoken of are related and their connection with a department involved in some scandals that arouse an indignation hard to master.

There should be no difficulty between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government to embarrass the lawful operations of either. There will be none occasioned by a document which when dissected and read in composure shows an awkwardness almost ludicrous. I have no apology to make for my acts, but I have for this speech and this show of temper. I have been tempted to examine and discuss the cases referring to myself in order that I might show the House and the country how absolutely hopeless and helpless the author of our trouble is in his attempt to do something which no doubt at this time he wishes he had left undone.

In conclusion, if these remarks should reach the ears of Mr. Bristow, they will not discourage me from doing business with him at the same old stand, as I have done a hundred times, and when there is any occasion for me to go to him or his department I will go, when I will endeavor to see that my constituents are not imposed upon, but get everything that they are justly entitled to and no more. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I will not accept time from the gentleman from Indiana. I demand time in my own right on a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. One question of privilege is already before the House. The Chair is of opinion that there can be but one question of privilege at a time.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I desire to take the floor in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman on a question of privilege when there is a question of privilege already before the House.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not wish to be confined to five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, can not this be done by unanimous consent? And if so, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut be permitted to present his question of privilege at this time.

The SPEAKER. Anything can be done by the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I desire, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to have it appear that I am denying the gentleman time. I am not objecting to it, but I am offering him time.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut shall be heard upon the question of privilege.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does that come out of the time allowed for general debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that general debate closes to-morrow at 4 o'clock.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Connecticut will indicate how much time he wants, I will offer no objection.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not know. I may want five minutes and I may not want over ten. I rise in my place as a Member of this House who has been charged by a coordinate branch of the Government in an official document with doing things that I ought not to do, and I rise in my place as a Member of this House on a question of privilege, with a right to be heard under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled that but one question of privilege can be considered at one time. Now, then, the Chair can not recognize the gentleman at this time, but the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut may be heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman from Iowa will couple that request with a request that the time for debate be extended for the same length of time that is occupied by the gentleman from Connecticut there will be no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will couple my request with that proposition, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa couples with his request for unanimous consent the further request that the time which may be occupied by the gentleman from Connecticut may be added to the total time for debate upon the question of privilege, that is to say, after 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut how much time he will occupy?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will be as brief as I can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I shall not endeavor to go into the details of the lease of the post-office in Norwalk. That needs no defense before my constituents. I propose to take up another branch of the subject of more interest to the Members of this House. When this publication was made day before yesterday I considered with myself what I should do. I did not know what course I should pursue. Yesterday I went to the Post-Office Department and submitted the following request:

First, I called for a copy of all the papers on file in regard to the Norwalk (Conn.) case, including pencil marks of every kind and character from beginning to end.

Second, I called for a copy of the instructions, if there were any in writing, given to the inspectors who went to Norwalk, and by what authority they were given.

Third, I wanted copies of all penciled memoranda and everything; copy of instructions, if in writing, given to the parties who had made up these cases for submission to Congress.

Fourth, if they were not in writing, I asked for a statement, so far as it could be given, from the party who gave such instructions for the preparation of this document.

I received this reply:

I beg to transmit herewith copies of all papers on file in this office in regard thereto, including penciled memoranda and a full synopsis of the report of Inspectors Pendleton and Birdsey.

In reply to specific inquires 2, 3, and 4, the honorable Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General states this is a part of the letter included in the reply made to me by the First Assistant Postmaster-General, Hon. R. J. Wynne; and a part of that letter is the reply from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

The investigation of Norwalk, Conn., was made the same as other lease cases affecting the salary and allowance division; and this action was taken under the general instructions of the Postmaster-General to investigate thoroughly that division.

That does not answer my question.

Copies of papers were sent to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives by order of the Postmaster-General, on the request of the chairman of that committee.

That does not answer my question.

The persons who prepared these papers were directed—

And the word "directed" has been rewritten over some other word. What it was I do not know—to make exact copies of correspondence between the Department and Congressmen. Under the rules of the Post-Office Department—

Note this, gentlemen—

Under the rules of the Post-Office Department, inspectors' reports can not be furnished unless the Postmaster-General should personally order it.

Now, what I wanted to know, first, was this: Who, by what authority, and under what instructions, if in writing, and if not in writing an official statement of those instructions—by what authority an inspector was sent on the 8th day of last October to the city of Norwalk, Conn., to investigate my action?

Second, I wanted to know who made up these papers. Of course I knew that they were called for by the committee. I knew that in the official correspondence they went to the Postmaster-General. I wanted to know who edited this document, for I had examined the inspector's reports in the morning, and I had found very material garbling in that report, and I wanted to know who edited this document.

Now, I said that I did not think it necessary—and I do not—to go into the details of the lease of the Norwalk post-office. It never was called for under this document. It has no bearing upon this question. It was not an increase of a lease. The time had expired, and the landlord, according to the report, which I will read to you, prepared by the inspectors themselves, stated he did not want to lease the building again.

It was a new transaction entirely, and if I ever have an opportunity I will show absolutely that I refused to have anything to do with the matter until a committee of the Merchants' Association of Norwalk, appointed, as I recall it, on my request, had settled upon a location for the new post-office. And that has been my uniform rule for the last five or six years, ever since we had a contest in the town of Westport over the location of a post-office. I have made it a rule to refuse to take any action under such circumstances and have for years held that "location" was a business matter to be decided by the Post-Office Department.

I am going to read to you now the document prepared by those inspectors, giving their own statement of this case, and sent to the Department, which was refused me when I called for it, as shown by this statement. Having received this communication last night, that I could not have it without further direction of the Postmaster-General, I went to the office this morning and I was told that I could read it. I took my own stenographer and proposed to copy it, but was told that I could not.

I said to myself, I will see whether I can or not. I went to the Postmaster-General's office; he was not there. I went to the office of the First Assistant; he was not there. I went to his chief clerk; he sent me to the Second Assistant. I went to the Second Assistant. Said he, "Mr. HILL, you are entitled to it; go down and copy it." I went, and I have the copy here. [Applause.] I am going to read to you this report. Before I do it I simply want to say that here is a petition from the leading citizens of Norwalk asking me two years ago to get a better post-office.

We, your fellow-townsmen, your friends and neighbors, most earnestly urge you to use all the influence you have to give us a better post-office in the city of Norwalk.

There was another petition protesting against the site. I filed that. I did not secrete it and keep it out. It is here, and every speck of paper relating to the whole thing from beginning to end, petitions and everything else, are here, and I am entirely willing that they should all be written on the sky for all mankind to read if they choose. There is absolutely nothing about it that in any way any man could make any criticism upon. It has no business to be in this document.

Now, let me read you this report. I will not say, as some have said here, that this is prompted by malice. I do not know. I do not know who has done it. I have not yet been able to reach a conclusion as to who edited this. The nearest that I have come to it yet is a statement by the chief inspector, Mr. Cochran, made to me yesterday, that it was done by five or six clerks. I said to him: "Mr. Cochran, is it fair between man and man that that report concerning me should have been made in that way?" Said he, "No, sir." There is a gentleman sitting right in front of me to whom he told that same thing to-day. Now, I do not know who has done it. I propose to find out. I will read this report:

Subject: Increased allowance for rent at Norwalk, Conn.
Case No., Special 30406.
C. H. Pendleton, G. F. H. Birdseye, post-office inspectors.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.
OFFICE OF THE POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Boston, Mass., October 10, 1903.

Hon. W. E. COCHRAN,
Chief Post-Office Inspector, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have the honor to report that, in compliance with your instructions, we visited Norwalk, Fairfield County, Conn., on the 7th and 8th instant, and investigated the matter relating to the increase of the allowance for rent at that office from $550, with heat and equipment, to $800 per annum, with heat and light, but without equipment, under a lease for the term of ten years from August 1, 1902, the Norwalk Club Company, by Ira Cole and George M. Holmes, executive committee, lessors.

This office formerly occupied a room of about 1,100 square feet, in a store owned by the said Ira Cole, on Wall street, at a rental of $550, including heat and fixtures, under a five-year lease, which expired March 31, 1902.

The fixtures were obsolete and unfit for use, except a small number of lock boxes. The premises were inadequate for the service, and Mr. Cole would not furnish new fixtures and did not desire to renew the lease.

The Norwalk Club Company submitted a proposition to rent the premises now occupied by the post-office, being on the first floor of a two-story brick block owned by the said company, the room being 23 feet wide by 93 feet deep, less a projection of 5 feet 6 inches wide by 25 feet 6 inches deep, the room containing 1,942 square feet, and a carriers' swing room in the basement, 17 feet by 23 feet, for an annual rental of $900 with heat and light, and $1,100 with heat, light, and equipment.

Now, notice the difference. I said I would not justify or go into the details of the matter; but I want to call your attention to the fact that the size of the room was more than double, that it added a swing room in the basement in addition, and that the company themselves spent $800 or more within my knowledge to meet the requirements of the Post-Office Department in this matter. This report continues:

Assistant Superintendent White, to whom the matter had been referred by Beavers, recommended the acceptance of the latter proposition, but through the influence of Congressman E. J. HILL Beavers accepted the former proposition and instructed Mr. White to obtain the necessary equipment, and to supervise the fitting up of the office.

Why should he not have done it? One was at $1,100 and the other was at $900. One was with equipment and one was without; one was at least a hundred dollars less than the other. Why should he not have done it?

We ascertained that an agreement was made with the Corbin Cabinet Lock Company, of New Britain, Conn., to furnish for $1,859.50 the necessary fixtures, except a desk and chairs furnished by Orpin Brothers, of Boston, Mass., for $85.50, and except a safe, which was owned by the Government, making a total expense for the fixtures of $1,936.

Mr. White, in a report to Beavers under date of October 30, 1902, states that the Corbin Cabinet Lock Company secured the contract under a competitive bid, but there is nothing in the papers in the case to show that there was any other bid.

Now, note that. Pretty quick I will read to you where they withdraw all that.

We ascertained that the room adjoining the post-office, in the same building and being of the same dimensions, and having like advantages as the post-office premises, rents for $600 per annum, without heat, light, or fixtures, and that the lessee painted and papered it at his own expense.

We learn that it costs the lessors of the post-office premises $75 per annum for heat, and that the cost of light during the past year was $84.12. It will thus be seen that if the post-office was rented on the same basis as the said adjoining room the rent would be $759.12 per annum. However, it is claimed that $800 is low annual rental for the said store, but it would appear that it is all the property is worth, as it was formerly rented to the Norwalk Library for $400 per annum and was vacant for some considerable time previous, and also as the club, when contemplating the erection of the building, were satisfied with a guaranty of $500 per annum for five years for each of the two rooms in the block from the said Ira Cole, from whom the block was purchased and who is an owner of nearly one-quarter of the stock of the club company.

I will not take the time of the House to dispute these facts. I will say simply that they are absolutely disputable and answerable in every respect.

The premises are situated about one block from the former post-office location and at one side of the business center of the town, but are fairly central and within the 80-rod limit of the railroad depot, and the room is well adapted for the post-office purposes in every respect.

We were told by Postmaster B. S. Keith that the fixtures were provided by the Department through the influence of Congressman E. J. HILL, who resides at Norwalk, and who owns twenty shares (par value $25, being 580 shares in the company) of the stock of the Norwalk Club Company, who are the lessors.

Mr. HILL being in California, we were unable to interview him. In view of the fact that he is a part owner of the post-office premises, though only one twenty-ninth—

That is a mistake. The building cost $28,000, and I, among a company of 150 gentlemen or more, who formed the Norwalk Club, had subscribed $500 toward its building thirteen years before, upon which I never received a cent in the way of dividends or interest, and it constituted me, as a matter of fact, the actual owner of one fifty-eighth of the cost and one twenty-ninth of the stock ownership.

Mr. HILL being in California, we were unable to interview him. In view of the fact that he is a part owner of the post-office premises, though only one twenty-ninth, and that he was instrumental in securing the lease, as shown by the papers in the case, it is evident, to say the least, that the clause in the lease which provides "that no Member of or Delegate to Congress shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract or agreement, or to any benefit to arise thereupon," has been violated.

Now, that is the statement of the inspector. It would have been perfectly proper for the gentleman who edited this document, if it had been true, to have put it there. What did he do? He went on and quoted correspondence and finally finished his statement with the statement of the fact that I owned $500 interest in a $28,000 building, and left it there for you and for the country to believe that I had either legally or technically done wrong.

Yet when that document was written, gentlemen, and sent to you, penciled across the margin of that statement on that report, and at the time this document was edited, was the pencil mark which you see signed "J. P. J.," the chief inspector, who branded that statement as "error," and yet the gentleman who edited that book and sent it here deemed it wise and proper not to put in that statement. Now, was it malice, was it ignorance, or what was it? I do not stand here asking an excuse from the people of this country and this House for violating even a technical provision of law. I have violated none. I will read you the law—the very next section; and I want to call your attention to the fact that this document quotes on this subject only section 3739, and puts these cases in here, entirely omitting section 3740, which follows next.

SEC. 3740. Nothing contained in the preceding section shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any contract or agreement, made or entered into, or accepted, by any incorporated company, when such contract or agreement is made for the general benefit of such incorporation or company; nor to the purchase or sale of bills of exchange or other property by any Member of (or Delegate to) Congress, when the same are ready for delivery, and payment therefor is made, at the time of making or entering into the contract or agreement.

There sit before me scores of men—stockholders in national banks, stockholders in railroad companies—every one of them under contract with the United States Government to greater or less extent, and this provision is put in there, not to excuse technical irregularities, but that the statutes should show that there was no irregularity, technical or otherwise.

It has been proper for a director of a national bank to sit on this floor, as it is for a director of the railroad company or anybody else; and these gentlemen who edited that report knew it.

But that is not all. That is the least part, and the very least part of it. Let me read:

At the time this lease was executed there was only one other proposition submitted, known as the "Weed" proposition, which Mr. White reported as not feasible, in which opinion we agree.

The proposition for $1,200. Of course it was declined; of course he reported against it.

Since writing the above—

I do not know when these reports were made up. They seem to have been made up in sections. I told you a moment ago that it stated that there were no competitive bids for fittings.

Since writing the above we have ascertained that there were competitive bids for furnishing the fixtures from the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company and from John McLane, of Milford, N. H., and that the Corbin Cabinet Lock Company, who fitted up the office, were the lowest bidders.

Judging from other rentals in the same locality, we are of the opinion that $800 would be a very liberal rent for the room, including heat and light, as furnished by the lessors for $900.

Now, gentlemen, for the closing clause.

Now, I have shown to you, first, that this was not a continuation of a lease; that it was not a renewal of a lease for the same premises; that the Government was compelled to withdraw from that building; that it was fairly and fully decided and tried; that the fixtures were bid for by competitive bids. Now, then, what? I own $500 out of a $28,000 cost of that building in an incorporated company with a capital of $14,500.

Now, then, read this last clause. I want to submit it to you gentlemen fully, as I submitted it to the First Assistant Postmaster-General yesterday and to the chief inspector of the Department yesterday, whether I had been fairly treated in submitting these papers as they stand in that book, and both of them told me "No."

This report closes as follows:

No irregularities were disclosed in the lease except as to part ownership of the building by Congressman HILL, which, according to Revised Statutes, No. 3740, seems to be admissible. We would therefore recommend that the case be closed.

Very repectfully,

C. H. PENDLETON,
G. F. H. BIRDSEYE,
Post-Office Inspectors.

That is not in that document sent to Congress; that is not there. Who struck it out? Who left this out? Gentlemen, I told you in the start that I had tried to follow this down. I asked these questions. I have been refused an answer specifically by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

I am going to have an answer to those questions. I am going to vote for a resolution to investigate myself and investigate the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. [Applause.] Somebody, I can not yet find out who, has sent to Congress what purports to be a true statement. It is false; it is scandalous. The man who withholds the truth when the truth is necessary to full knowledge is just as responsible as the man who falsely states the facts or what may be the facts. [Applause.] I do not know who he is. I have not yet discovered him, but I propose to do so. [Applause.]

I am going to find out and I am going to know who edited this most remarkable document. Fully realizing that I do not know who he is, I say that that document wholly misrepresents the case. I submit the facts just as I find them. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker I shall be glad if the gentleman from Tennessee will take charge of the time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, the mention of my name in this report [laughter and applause] and insinuations made thereby is a matter of such small import to me that I hardly deem it necessary to submit any remarks to this House on the subject; but since the newspapers have sent out the report, under the head of "The post-office scandal," that certain Members of Congress are connected with it, I desire to make a brief statement in reference to why my name was mentioned.

Some years before I was elected to Congress, or before I ever thought of being a candidate, I erected a building in the town of Tuskegee, in which I live, and at the suggestion of the postmaster at that time provided in that building a room for the post-office, which he agreed to rent and occupy. When that building was completed, according to the agreement, he moved in and occupied it. When I was elected to Congress the post-office was still in the building, for which I was paid at a fair rental value. The Bank of Tuskegee occupies a portion of the same building and paid for its portion $25 per month, and the post-office paid $20 per month for its portion thereof.

On one occasion I went down to the Post-Office Department in Washington, as I thought I had the right to do, and submitted a request from the Tuskegee postmaster asking for an additional clerk in his office, submitting a letter in which he stated that the work had grown to such proportions that his clerical force was inadequate. Mr. Beavers very promptly and courteously called up the Tuskegee case, and upon investigation stated: "You are not entitled under the schedule list to any increase in clerk hire in your post-office, and I can not give it to you, but you are entitled to an increase in the rent."

"Well," I said, "an increase was asked for by the postmaster some time ago, with a view of having new furniture placed in the office with a lot of improved letter boxes and an iron safe, which he was not able to furnish, and which the landlord did furnish at a cost of $800, and if that office is entitled to additional rent under the schedule rate I hope you will grant it." A few days afterwards I received a letter from Mr. Beavers stating that the increase had been granted, which letter has been published in the report of the committee now under consideration.

Mention is made as to the ownership of the building by means of an addenda or note to that letter, and I simply wish to now incorporate in my remarks a communication from Mr. Wynne, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, containing an opinion from the Assistant Attorney-General on this subject, and in which he clearly sets forth that where a building was occupied as a post-office and owned by a person who afterwards became a Member of Congress this fact did not invalidate the contract nor render the owner incapable of continuing the lease of his property to the Government under the law.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has thoroughly exonerated every Member of Congress who had his property leased to the Government before he was elected, but in addition to the clear statement on his part, I now respectfully ask that the following opinion be incorporated in my remarks:

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the memorandum prepared by Mr. White, the assistant superintendent of the salary and allowance division, stationed at Boston, in which is quoted an act of Congress on contracts between the Government and a Member of Congress, I find that the statute cited has no bearing whatever on your case as stated to me.

The contract between the Post-Office Department and yourself for the use of certain quarters in Torrington for postal purposes was made before your election. I am informed by the law officer of this Department that a contract made by the proper officer of the Government with a person who, during the existence of same, is elected a member of Congress is not affected by such election.

This declaration is based upon an opinion to be found in volume 5, "Opinions of Attorney-General," page 607. That opinion was rendered by the Hon. C. A. Rodney in 1809, one year after the passage of the act of Congress referred to, and to which Mr. White called your attention. It is unnecessary for me to quote that opinion, which may be found by reference to the volume indicated. In that opinion you will discover that there is no need for this Department to take any notice of your election, so far as it relates to the contract with you as the owner of the Torrington property occupied as the post-office.

Having officially called attention to your doubts on the subject, and having had the subject investigated, I take great pleasure in writing this letter at your request. The lease is in effect; the rent will be paid to you or your agent.

Very sincerely,

R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

When this report appeared in print yesterday, I addressed a letter to the honorable First Assistant Postmaster-General, and asked him if the rate allowed for rent at Tuskegee was in excess of the rate allowed for post-offices of a similar character in other parts of the country, and I herewith submit his reply:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1904.

Hon. CHARLES W. THOMPSON,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your request of this date for information concerning the allowance for rent at Tuskegee, Ala., I beg to state that the present allowance ($300 per annum) is within the scale fixed by the Department for rent at post-offices of the third class, and was within the scale at the time the allowance was increased from $240 to $300, on April 1, 1902. The receipts of the office at that time were $5,805 and the salary was $1,700, and under the scale in use $300 is the maximum allowance for an office of this grade.

The receipts of the Tuskegee office for the last fiscal year amounted to $6,775, and the salary of the postmaster was fixed at $1,800. The scale allowance for an office of this grade is $350 for rent and $60 for fuel and light. An examination of the records shows that the post-office was moved to its present building many years ago—before you were elected to Congress. The post-office premises are not under a lease to the Government, but are simply rented by the month. There is nothing in the papers to indicate that the rent is excessive nor is any reduction in the rent contemplated.

Very respectfully,

R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

In my letter to him I requested that if the rent was excessive, to please reduce it. His letter shows that the rent allowed at that post-office is $50 per annum less than the schedule rate, and the rent allowed at other places in this Government for post-offices of a similar character.

Now, I can not say what the object of the author of this infamous document was, but I do believe that it was sent here for the purpose of intimidating the Members of this House so that they would not insist upon their rights and the rights of their constituents. And I give notice here that any such insinuation remotely reflecting upon me will not deter me one moment from endeavoring earnestly and faithfully, and to the utmost of my ability, to advocate the cause of my constituents before Mr. Bristow or any other officer in any Department of this Government. [Applause.]

In many cases I have applied to Mr. Beavers either to ask him for an increase for postmasters in my district who were serving the Government for the paltry sum of $100 per annum, furnishing their own house and boxes, and in nearly every instance he granted the increase, saying that they were entitled to it according to law, and in no case did he ever grant an increase in my district that was not authorized by law. In any case not warranted by the statute I neither asked him to do it, nor did I want him to do it; but where a postmaster was entitled to it, I think, sir, it was the duty of the Government to give it.

It can not be denied that the Departments generally wait for Representatives to go and demand of the Government that justice be done to these officers and employees; and because Members of Congress, forsooth, are forced to go there and demand justice they are criticised here by this extraordinary report, made manifestly for sensational purposes, with malice toward all and charity toward none. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to express my views upon the proposition now pending before this body. I may enjoy the unique position described by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] of being a Member of this House who has arrived so lately upon the scene as to be unable to get into the RECORD. [Laughter.]

I am not mentioned in the report; nor is any other Member from Arkansas.

The discussion before this body on this occasion and the report of the Post-Office Department submitted in connection with the report of the Post-Office Committee reveals, to my mind, a remarkable state of affairs. In the beginning, for fear that, as other gentlemen seem to have done, I fail to make clear what my position on this resolution is, I want to state now and here that I believe it is the duty of every self-respecting Member of Congress to vote for the Hay resolution and against the proposition to let it lie on the table.

The resolution is as follows:

[Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, House of Representatives. Resolution No. 118.]

Whereas Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General J. L. Bristow, in his report to the Postmaster-General, dated October 24, 1903, and which report has been transmitted to a committee of this House, has charged that "long-time leases for post-office premises were canceled and the rent increased upon the recommendation of influential Representatives;" and

Whereas it is charged in the same report that "if a Member of Congress requested an increase in the clerk hire allowed a postmaster Beavers usually complied, regardless of the merits of the case;" and

Whereas certain cases of an aggravated character are cited on pages 133, 134, and 135 of said report to sustain the above charges; and

Whereas on page 145 of said report it is charged that Members of Congress have violated section 3739 of the Revised Statutes, and that "in the face of this statute Beavers has made contracts with Members of Congress for the rental of premises, either in their own names, the names of their agents, or some member of their families;" and

Whereas these charges and others contained in said report reflect upon the integrity of the membership of this House, and upon individual Members of this House whose names are not mentioned: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of this House, to investigate said charges; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer, and to have power to sit during the sessions of the House, and to exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of said charges, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

In addition to adopting this resolution, I believe it is our duty to vote for a proposition to investigate thoroughly the Post-Office Department, which has confessedly been unable to conduct its affairs with a fair degree of seeming propriety. [Applause.] We have heard in the last few months a shameless story of fraud and crime, going to the very foundation of the Post-Office Department and extending through many of its divisions.

It has been said heretofore that this is a government of the people, for the people, and by the people. But incidents which have transpired, and which have been brought to light, indicate that this is rapidly becoming a government of the Departments, for the Departments, and by the Departments. [Applause and laughter.]

It has been stated by a gentleman upon the floor of this House to-day that many evidences easily within the reach of the Post-Office Department have been suppressed in connection with the report that has been made here. This shows conclusively to my mind that there is no merit, no reason for the proposition to pass this matter by lightly and without consideration. If there is anything which ought to appeal to a gentleman who regards his honor sacredly, it is a charge that reflects upon his personal and official integrity.

It has been asked here what is the purpose of this report? It contains the names of many gentleman, giving, among other things, what is supposed to be evidence of their misconduct in connection with clerk hire for postmasters and increases in salaries.

It has been asked what is the purpose of piling up here a record which it would take any Member of this body from one to two days to digest by careful consideration; and that, too, consisting of circumstances entirely irrelevant to any matter under investigation? It has been variously answered. It has been said that certain malicious parties in the Post-Office Department, for the purpose of wreaking some spite or vengeance against Members of this body, have returned this document here. I want to tell you what the sole purpose is. I believe it is an attempt to muddy the waters; it is a deliberate attempt to intimidate this House and to prevent them from further investigating the Post-Office Department. That, in my judgment, is the only purpose which it can tend to serve. The statement has been made by one member of the Post-Office Committee that there is nothing in this report which involves moral turpitude upon the part of any Member.

The statement has also been made by another Member that if an investigation of this matter can be had, it will, in his judgment, reach with power into this House. I do not know what that statement means, unless it be that there is something here that ought to be investigated. But whether this report indicates moral turpitude on the part of Members named therein, or not, the fact remains that throughout the entire country the rumor has gone, the cry has rung, that 151 Members of the American Congress have been guilty of misconduct in office. In flaming headlines every newspaper in the country has made the charge. And now, gentlemen of the American Congress, it remains for you to say whether or not you will investigate the matter and determine this question upon sworn testimony or dispose of it upon the unverified report submitted from the Department, the author of which report is not known and can not be ascertained; a report which is manifestly incomplete, inaccurate, and unjust.

I believe that one reason why this resolution should not lie on the table, but should be passed, is the fact that confessedly the report which came from the Post-Office Department is not a complete report, does not give the evidence in full, and omits cases referred to in the report dated December 15, 1903, as "aggravated cases," which ought to be investigated. Another reason is that this report is based entirely upon ex parte and irresponsible testimony. Who ever heard of an indictment being brought and prosecuted and determined entirely upon ex parte testimony, and that, too, when nobody had ever been placed under oath? [Applause.]

Is there any such degree of sanctity attaching to the procedure of the Post-Office Department that would warrant us in a matter of so great concern in receiving as true the unverified statement of one of its clerks? It has given to the Government the greatest scandal known to modern times, a scandal that is a stench in the nostrils of every law-abiding, self-respecting citizen—a scandal which shows conclusively that officers employed in that Department have robbed and stolen and plundered from the Government for years and years, and that every effort to investigate their conduct save only by and through officers and employees of the Department has been defeated.

The time is now imminent, the issue is pertinent, whether this state of affairs shall continue or whether now, once and for all time, we shall determine the question whether the Post-Office Department, under the laws of this country, shall stand for an honest and economical administration, or whether men high in authority shall be permitted to pillage and plunder the Treasury of the United States and then go unwhipped of well-deserved justice upon a plea of the statute of limitations.

Let us commence investigating in time. Let us begin before the statute of limitations can run against other crimes which may have been committed and have not been brought to light. Then we shall not have the spectacle of officers going to the remote parts of this continent to escape investigation and trial upon charges of dishonesty in office, to which there can be no answer except that punishment is barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly manifest that injustice has been done, whether intentionally or otherwise, to many Members of this body. By reference to page 186 of the report submitted with the report of the Post-Office Committee, we find a case which is extremely interesting, from the fact that it shows nothing more than that the Member mentioned had discharged his duty. In order that you may see for yourself how absurd any suggestion of misconduct is in this case, I submit the whole record of it.

I omit the name of the Member for the reason that I do not care to insert it in the RECORD without first conferring with him, which I have had no opportunity of doing.

GEORGETOWN.

At Georgetown, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,900, the allowances up to December 18, 1900, were $275 for rent and $30 for fuel and light, making a total of $305 per annum.

On December 13, 1899, the postmaster at Georgetown advised the Department the building in which the post-office was located was owned by a Masonic lodge and that they contemplated building a new building on the site then occupied by the building in which post-office was located. Postmaster further stated that the lodge proposed to furnish temporary quarters for the post-office in another building, and wanted the post-office to occupy a room in the new building when it was completed. On December 19 the postmaster was given permission to move the post-office to temparary quarters until the new room proposed by the Masonic lodge was completed.

On August 10, 1900, postmaster was authorized to move the post-office to the building that had been completed on the old site of the post-office, provided that no additional expense for rent was incurred by the change. The postmaster was instructed to report the date of the change of site.

The following memorandum appears in the files of the case:

"NOVEMBER 20, 1900.

"Memorandum for Mr. Du Paul: Hon. —— —— called and stated that the Masons of Georgetown are erecting a fine building and propose to lease a room for the post-office, equipped with boxes, fixtures, and furniture. He requests that the proposition (which will be at the rate of $350 per annum for rent) be accepted. Hon. —— —— was given blank propositions and will have them properly filled out and filed."

On December 26, 1900, the postmaster at Georgetown informed the Department that he had moved to the new quarters in Masonic Temple on December 18, 1900.

A proposition, under date of December 4, was submitted by officers of the Masonic lodge to lease a building, 27 by 42 feet, for a term of five years from December 1, 1900, at an annual rental of $350. This proposition did not include the furnishing of fixtures, etc.

On January 2, 1901, Department informed the postmaster that the proposition from San Gabriel Lodge, No. 89, A. F. and A. M., to lease a room at $350 per annum had been received, and that Hon. —— —— had called at the Department on November 30 and was advised that a proposition to lease a room in the new Masonic Temple at $350 per annum would be favorably considered, but with the understanding that the lessor would furnish complete post-office outfit of boxes, furniture, and fixtures. The letter further stated that the proposition submitted did not include the equipment, and as the rental had been increased $75 over the amount then paid for the same room, the postmaster was informed to confer with the officers of the lodge and have them amend the proposition by agreeing to furnish the post-office outfit.

On January 30 postmaster forwarded to the Department another proposition from the lodge, dated December 18, 1900, which proposed to furnish the room in Masonic Temple and complete equipment at the rate of $350 per annum. On February 5, 1901, the following letter was written to Congressman ——:

FEBRUARY 5, 1901.

Hon. —— ——,
House of Representatives, United States.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your personal visit to this office on the 4th instant, relative to increase in allowance for rent of post-office premises at Georgetown, I beg to advise you that in accordance with your recommendation the allowance for this office will be increased to $400 per annum, effective July 1 next.

Very respectfully,

—— ——,
Superintendent.

On the same date this letter was written the postmaster was advised that it had been decided to allow $400 rent per annum for the premises occupied by the post-office, effective July 1, 1901.

On February 14, 1901, the postmaster addressed a letter to the honorable First Assistant Postmaster-General, stating that he understood from the Department that he had been allowed $350 for rent and $30 for fuel and light from December 18, 1900, to June 30, 1901, and that from the latter date he would be allowed $400 for rent and $30 for fuel and light. February 19 the postmaster was advised, in answer to his letter of February 14, that he should secure a proposition on the basis of $400 to cover expenses of rent, fuel, and light. On February 26, 1901, the postmaster was advised that it had been agreed with Congressman —— that $400 would be allowed from July 1 for rent, and that the allowance then made for fuel and light for the Georgetown post-office would be continued.

On March 11 officers of the Masonic lodge submitted another proposition to rent same room in their building for $400 per annum from July 1, 1901, to be furnished with complete equipment, and heat and light to be furnished by the Post-Office Department.

On June 15, 1901, the lease was prepared in the Department on the basis of $400 per annum and sent to the postmaster at Georgetown for proper execution and record.

LOCKHARDT.

At Lockhardt, where the salary of the postmaster was $1,700, the allowances up to July 1, 1901, were $175 for rent and $38 for fuel and light, a total of $213 per annum. On February 12, 1901, Post-Office Inspector James W. Bass reported that from a personal investigation he did not believe the office was as centrally located as it should be, and there was not sufficient room to properly handle the business. He suggested that there might be more room provided by a rearrangement of the fixtures. On April 2, 1901, the postmaster reports that the building in which the post-office was located was entirely too small to accommodate the patrons and transact the business of the office, and that the allowance of $175 per annum for rent was not sufficient to secure another building of the proper size.

On April 13, 1901, the postmaster reported that the best proposition that had been made for furnishing premises for a post-office was by the owners of the building in which the post-office was then located. The offer made was to extend the length of the room 30 feet and arrange the room to best possible advantage, for an annual rent of $240. On April 19, 1901, the postmaster was advised that an allowance of $240 for rent would be made, to take effect from July 1, 1901, if proposed changes and improvements were completed at that time, and instructed the postmaster to make report on July 1. Postmaster was further instructed to secure written contract for the premises to cover the remainder of his term of office.

On the brief of the case the following indorsements appear:

"Lease $240. June 1, 1901. G. W. B. Increase to $300. July 1, 1901. G. W. B. Advise ——, M. C."

On June 18, the following letter was written to the Hon. —— ——:

JUNE 18, 1901.

Hon. —— ——,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to your personal visit relative to increase in allowance for rent, fuel, and light for post-office premises at Lockhardt, I beg to advise you that an allowance of $300 per annum will be approved for this office, if the improvements to the post-office building are made by July 1.

Very respectfully,

—— ——,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

On the same date that the additional rent was allowed postmaster at Lockhardt was advised that it had been decided, upon recommendation of Hon. ——— ———, to allow $300 for rent at that office, which was to take effect July 1, 1901, provided the improvements the owners of the premises had agreed to make had been completed by that date.

On June 22 the postmaster reported that the improvements agreed upon had been made by the owners of the premises occupied by the post-office, and further stated that the allowance of $48 per annum for fuel and light was not sufficient, and that it would require $48 per annum to properly light the building.

On June 28 the postmaster was informed that the estimate for lighting was too high and was requested to state why a reduction in price of lighting could not be secured. On September 19, 1901, postmaster reported that it would require $3 per month to properly light the post-office premises, and requested that the allowance for heating and lighting be increased to $55 per annum.

On the brief of the case, under date of September 26, 1901, is indorsed: "Allowed $300 for rent, $55 for fuel and light from July 1, 1901."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. By referring to page 36 we find that upon the recommendation of a Member of this body a postmaster's allowance was increased $200, effective December, 1899; that in September, 1903, this allowance was discontinued; that subsequently the recommendation was renewed, and that a special inspector was appointed to investigate the matter. He reported in favor of an increase of $300. Yet this report ostensibly criticises the Member of Congress for recommending the increase of $200, when an inspector of the Post-Office Department recommends an increase of $300.

To further illustrate the manifest injustice of any allusion (in connection with charges of misconduct) to this incident, I submit the entire statement of the matter as it appears in the document returned by the committee from the Department:

LIBERTY.

Allowance, $50. November 18, 1899, postmaster asked increase.
November 28, 1899, Hon. ——— ——— personally recommended increase.
November 28, 1899, increased from $50 to $200, effective December 1, 1899, and so advised Mr. ———.
December 31, 1900, directed postmaster make count of transit mail handled, which he did and reported on January 16, 1901, showing him entitled to an allowance of $40.
January 22, 1902, postmaster requested increase for local work.
January 28, declined, but sent him circular for another count of transit matter handled. No report.
April 24, 1902, Hon. ——— ——— recommends increase. April 25, 1902, declined.
May 26, 1903, asked Railway Mail Service to make count of transit mail handled.
August 19, 1903, Railway Mail Service reports, showing office entitled to no allowance.
September 1, 1903, allowance of $200 discontinued from September 1.
September 21, ——— ——— and (December 2) Hon. ——— ——— recommend restoration of allowance.
September 23, referred to inspector, and ——— and Mr. ——— advised.
December 10, 1903, inspector recommends $50 for separating and $250 for unusual business. No action yet taken.

It may well be stated that nothing in the document makes any direct charge of misconduct on the part of these Members, or of either of them, and that the facts as they appear in the statement directly contradict any such assertion. Still the coupling of these with other transactions of Beavers, charged by the Department as being improper, is a manifest injustice to these gentlemen and only tends to confuse and bewilder—in fact, to cover up—the real issue with a cloud of irrelevancies.

"But," gentlemen of the committee say, "this report is not a reflection on any Member of this body; it exonerates everybody." That is one of the objections to it. It brings in here a statement which on its face exonerates many Members, while it covers up details and circumstances and omits instances heretofore charged by the Department as being reprehensible and which perhaps deserve and require an investigation on the part of this House.

In the course of the discharge of duty a Member may find it necessary to go to one of the Departments when he is requested to make a recommendation upon a matter of this kind. Under these circumstances, what is the duty of an American Congressman? Should he sit here idle and merely register the will of the Department? Has the time come when a man elected to this body and intrusted with the responsibility of representing his people shall make himself a mere automaton to do only what some clerk in the Post-Office Department recommends he should do, and that, too, when that clerk's hands may be filled with ill-gotten gain filched from the United States Treasury? Shall not the Member rather rely on his own judgment, do what he thinks is right, and that without fear of disfavor from other officers?

This proposition ought to be determined in all seriousness by Congress. You may treat it lightly if you want to; you may laugh at it and say, "It means nothing." But this publication has already served a vicious purpose. Many Members on this floor who, according to the report itself, have committed no offense are the victims of the judgment of some unknown officer in the Post-Office Department that they have been guilty of improprieties at least and their names coupled with scandalous transactions.

True, the report does not charge misconduct against any Member. But misconduct is charged upon Beavers to the effect that on the recommendation of Members of Congress he made allowances that were not meritorious. Thus, by innuendo, and thus alone, some Members are charged with having made recommendations that were not meritorious and proper.

It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that this matter should be treated with earnestness. That the American Congress out of respect for itself, and from a sense of loyalty to duty, should investigate this matter fully and freely and make its report to this body.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me one suggestion before he takes his seat? I have just been informed by an old and honored Member of the House of Representatives that in a conversation the night before last with General Bristow, that gentleman, who is very feeble, trembling from illness, told him that he (General Bristow) had never seen this report as it is now printed. Therefore, I think the abuse of him ought to stop.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the gentleman for this suggestion. It has been stated on the floor of this body that nobody knows where this report comes from. I have not said one word about Mr. Bristow; but I do say, Mr. Speaker, that this is another illustration of my general argument that this extension of authority to clerks in the Post-Office Department to make reports upon important matters like this ought to be prevented. There ought to be a change in this regard, so that this indiscriminate coupling of honest men's names with those of rascals may never be permitted to happen again. [Applause.]

Let us pass this resolution and adopt a proposition to investigate the Post-Office Department. Let us probe these matters carefully under our oaths of office, to the end that the public may know the true state of facts and violators of the law receive just punishment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEASES OF POST-OFFICES, PREMISES, ETC.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I have not been mentioned in this list of gentlemen who are indicted here or who have received honorable mention, and I do not know so well about this. I have been thinking about it since I have read this report, as to whether this will do me any good with my constituents or not. I am inclined to think that they will believe I have not been doing anything up here at all. [Laughter.] I know I have written quite a number of letters, in substance just like some of these that are printed here, and I expect to continue it if my constituents demand it. But I have some curiosity beyond this. Perhaps I have not incurred the enmity or the malice of the Post-Office Department, and therefore they have not included me in this indictment. Now, to-day, gentlemen of the House, I tried to get the chairman of the Post-Office Committee [Mr. OVERSTREET] to auswer a question. I should like to have his attention now. He refused to answer the question. The gentleman from South Carolina put the same question to him and he dodged it again. I am going to ask the House now. I will put the question to the House myself. This indictment, or, in other words, this resolution, offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], was based upon nine distinct cases mentioned by Mr. Bristow in his report to your committee, or, in other words, to the President.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Originally.

Mr. MADDOX. Originally. You said to-day that you had invited, and the RECORD shows that Congress did invite the giving of the names of all the parties who had in any respect violated the law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The language of the letter was:

A complete list of all cases referred to in said report.

Mr. MADDOX. Mentioned in the report. I undertake to say that you have not mentioned in this report of "rascals," as some of you have called it, a single one of the original nine that Mr. Bristow saw proper to mention in his original report. I wanted to find why that is. If those gentlemen were in that original report, and if they were sought out by Secretary Bristow and mentioned as cases——

Mr. BARTLETT. Aggravated cases.

Mr. MADDOX. Aggravated cases, I wanted to find out why it is that you did not put them in this report or demand that they be put in there?

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has fished up this report and he finds one case from Georgia which he says is a very aggravated case. It is here to show for itself whether it is an aggravated case or not, but I want this House to know that Conyers, Ga., is not in the Seventh district, which I represent.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not in the Sixth district either, I want to say.

Several MEMBERS. Next.

Mr. MADDOX. I think any gentleman can find where it is by consulting the directory.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where is it?

Mr. MADDOX. Now, gentlemen, it is this matter that I want to call the attention of the committee to. It has already been published that certain men were mentioned as having violated the law before you made inquiry of the Department, and yet the cases referred to were left out of your report. Now, why did you refuse to answer? That is what I want to know.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman, possibly unintentionally, says that I left it out.

Mr. MADDOX. No; I ask you why you allowed it to be left out.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I stated that we called upon the Postmaster-General to submit a statement in detail and in full explanation of all cases referred to in Mr. Bristow's report submitted to him. Then we submitted to the House all of those papers in our report. We carried that report into the House.

Mr. MADDOX. Then why did not the Department bring it out?

Mr. OVERSTREET. You must ask the Department that. I do not know.

Mr. MADDOX. This resolution here is based upon these nine cases. Your attention was called to each and every one of them, and yet here is a list that goes to the country mentioning Members of this House as violators of the law, when the nine cases to which the Secretary calls the attention of the President and of Congress are entirely left out of the list of "rascals," so called.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman asks me to answer him?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. In a letter addressed to the Postmaster-General under authority of the committee this language was used:

In view of the references of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in his report to you under date of October 24, 1903, to the action of Members of Congress in recommending increase of clerk hire and cancellation of leases and their renewal at a higher rate, I request that this committee be furnished at the earliest practicable date a complete list of all cases referred to in said report relating to allowances for clerk hire in offices where those allowances have subsequently been discontinued, and also of all cases where leases of post-office premises have been canceled and renewed at a higher rate, together with a statement in detail giving a full explanation of the facts connected with each case.

Mr. MADDOX. Your letter was full enough, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And the facts, the papers in entirety, sent to the committee in response to that letter are printed in this report without modification.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, that is all right, so far as the letter is concerned.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But what the gentleman complained of was that we left out something. I can only say that we did not leave out anything.

Mr. MADDOX. There were nine cases, or alleged cases, on which this indictment, if it is an indictment, is based. That is left out of the report, and why are the other eight cases left out, and why not give to this House the benefit of the names of the gentlemen charged?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Because they were not sent to the committee.

Mr. MADDOX. They were not sent to the committee, and yet the gentleman stated, when I interrupted him here, or attempted to interrupt him, that you had a full and complete statement of all these things.

Mr. OVERSTREET. So far as submitted.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman's report says that you have not got it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I said so far as submitted.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall oppose the tabling of this resolution. I trust there is manhood enough in this House, that have got respect enough for the honor, integrity, and dignity of the House, to refuse to table the resolution, but take it up and amend it, and let us investigate this subject and see who the rascals really are, and let the country know who they are. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KINKAID, for ten days, on account of important business.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill, now on the Speaker's table, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, has the report been printed?

Mr. FOSS. The bill has been printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it a conference report?

Mr. FOSS. It is going into conference. We are just asking to go into conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is a request that the bill be put in conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana presents the following conference report, to be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to pay the Clatsop tribe of Indians, of Oregon, in full satisfaction of all demands or claims against the United States for lands described in the agreement between the United States and the said Indians dated August 7, 1851, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARD submitted an amendment providing that in carrying out any irrigation enterprise which may be undertaken under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and which may make possible and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the reclamation of all or any portion of the irrigable lands on the Yuma and Colorado River Indian Reservations in California and Arizona, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to divert the waters of the Colorado River, and to reclaim, utilize, and dispose of any lands in said reservations which may be irrigable by such works in like manner as though the same were a part of the public domain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that in carrying out any irrigation enterprise which may be undertaken under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and which may make possible and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the reclamation of all or any portion of the irrigable lands on the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev., the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reclaim, utilize, and dispose of any lands in said reservation which may be irrigable by such works in like manner as though the same were a part of the public domain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOPKINS submitted two amendments relating to the salaries of deputy clerks in the Indian Territory, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell such lands in the Indian Territory as are covered by coal and asphalt leases, subject to the right of the lessee to use so much of the surface as may be needed for coke ovens, miners' houses, store and supply buildings, and such other structures as are generally used in the provision and shipment of coal, coke, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment providing for the payment, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to and due, or which may hereafter become due, to the Choctaw Nation of the sum of $220,698.75 to the attorney and representative of such Choctaw Nation, as per contract duly executed by said nation, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARMACK submitted an amendment providing for the appointment of two assistant inspectors of buildings at $1,200 each and also three assistant inspectors of buildings at $1,000, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD A. KEELER.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the rolls of the Senate as a messenger the name of Edward A. Keeler, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

SPEECH ON NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask permission to incorporate in the speech on the naval appropriation bill I made the other day some official figures and diagrams.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and leave is given.

H. SMITH WOOLLEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CARMACK, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all documents and papers that have been filed in the Treasury Department in relation to the appointment of H. Smith Woolley, a former deputy internal-revenue collector of the district of Idaho, whose name is now before the Senate for confirmation as assayer in charge at Boise, Idaho.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance. That committee has considered and is considering——

Mr. CARMACK. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, is debate in order under the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CARMACK. I have only a few words to say respecting the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. This seems to me to be clearly under the Senate rules a matter of executive business. It relates to papers in regard to a pending Executive appointment. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Tennessee, but I ask him to consider himself whether it does not belong, under our rules, to executive business.

Mr. CARMACK. I think we had a very long debate here with respect to this very question of calling upon the President for information respecting appointments.

Mr. TELLER. Two months.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read again, so that the Senate will understand what it is. Some Senators were not attending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me for a minute?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I would be very glad if the Senator would let this matter be passed over until to-morrow morning. This day has been given to Alaskan legislation. We had one day given last week, and the Committee on Appropriations took it, and then we asked for this day. The Senator will do us a great favor if he will give us this day and let the resolution go over.

Mr. CARMACK. I shall be very glad to let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

Mr. CARMACK. But it must be understood also that the confirmation of this man will go over, too.

Mr. KEAN. That is executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he allow this question to be discussed in executive session. It is rather an important matter, and the Committee on Finance——

Mr. CARMACK. I think I have a right to discuss the matter in open session.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, Mr. President. As the resolution has gone over, I shall make no further suggestion about it to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has gone over, retaining its place.

Mr. CARMACK. It has not gone over yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has gone over, retaining its place on the table.

Mr. CARMACK. There is so much confusion in the Chamber I can not hear what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has gone over, retaining its place.

Mr. HOAR. I give notice that when the resolution, of which I know nothing whatever of the merits, comes up I shall raise the question under the rule that the debate ought to proceed in executive session, and I hope some Senator will second that suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad to second it.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11443) to extend the exemption from head tax to citizens of Newfoundland entering the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

PROOF OF LOYALTY IN LAND-ENTRY CASES.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 44) as to the provisions of "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the payment of certain fees, purchase money, and commission paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the payment of certain fees, purchase money, and commission paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880, shall be construed to abolish the necessity for proof of loyalty in the cases mentioned in said act, and no proof of loyalty shall be required in the cases mentioned in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROADS, SCHOOLS, ETC., IN ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the following bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3728) to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane and destitute persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and that it may be read for action on the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the committee shall first receive consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is not a very long bill. I think it ought to be read.

PENSIONS FOR TOTAL BLINDNESS.

Mr. MCCUMBER. With the consent of the Senators having the Alaskan bills in charge, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 671) to increase the pensions of those who have lost both eyes or have become totally blind from causes occurring in the military or naval service of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As I understand from the Senator from North Dakota that the bill to which he refers is a pension bill, is very short, and will not cause any discussion, I shall be glad to yield to him for that purpose.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have lost both eyes, or who have become totally blind from causes occurring in the service of the United States, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the last two lines read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last two lines will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the bill is finally acted on, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions how large an appropriation will be required to carry out the provisions of the bill?

Mr. MCCUMBER. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, I will state that it will require $201,600, there being exactly 600 on the list.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply say, and I shall occupy but a moment, that some years ago, when I was chairman of that committee, an investigation was made on this subject, and the responses from the several pension agencies led me to understand that it would take a very much larger amount than that named by the Senator. I presume that a great many of these ex-soldiers have died since then, and I take it that the figures the Senator from North Dakota has given are correct.

I have been in favor, for a great many years, of the passage of a bill of this kind. I think this class of soldiers is among the most deplorable of the various classes, and I certainly will favor the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me to call up a bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4620) to amend section 8 of an act approved April 15, 1902, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Parkville, Mo.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 9, after the word "April," to strike out "first" and insert "fifteenth;" and in the same line to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" in line 10, after "April," to strike out "first" and insert "fifteenth;" and in line 11 to strike out "nine" and insert "eight;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act of Congress authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Parkville, Mo., approved April 15, 1902, shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced by April 15, 1906, and completed by April 15, 1908."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSIONS BY BREVET.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Indiana to yield to me to allow me to have another bridge bill passed. It already has been passed by the House and was reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. It will take only a few moments.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri, but I have agreed to yield first to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I desire to state that, after yielding to the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Missouri, I feel that it would not be expedient to yield further this morning.

Mr. WARREN. By the kind courtesy of the Senator in charge of the pending bill, I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 4164) to amend section 1209 of the Revised Statutes—a very short bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the bill will occasion no discussion.

Mr. WARREN. It will occasion no discussion. If it does, I will withdraw it.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out, after line 5, the following:

SEC. 1209. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may confer commissions by brevet for distinguished conduct and public service on the part of commissioned officers of the Army in time of war and in the presence of the enemy.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 1209. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may confer commissions by brevet for gallant and distinguished conduct on the part of commissioned officers of the Army in war and in the presence of the enemy or in armed conflict in and during the China relief expedition or the insurrection in the Philippines, stating the time and place of such gallant and distinguished conduct.

So as to read:

That section 1209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1209. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may confer commissions by brevet," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1209 of the Revised Statutes, relating to brevets."

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9053) to amend an act to amend an act to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at a point between Kansas City and Sibley, in Jackson County.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROADS, SCHOOLS, ETC., IN ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3728) to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane and destitute persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Secretary proceeds to read, I wish simply to say that in asking that the bill be read I have no disposition to delay its consideration, and assume it will not. Some of the friends of the bill had an idea, I understand, that if read through in its entirety it would then have to be read through again for amendment. As I understand the matter, after it has been read through the amendments of the committee will then be submitted without a complete reading of the bill the second time. Am I not correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. So it will not delay the consideration of the bill if it shall take the usual course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no objection to the bill taking the usual course in being read, if that is the ruling of the Chair.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Territories will be stated.

Mr. NELSON. Before that is done, I desire to offer an amendment which has been suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I ask to have that considered first. In section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "liquor," I move to insert "licenses."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "liquor," it is proposed to insert "licenses," so as to read:

That all moneys derived from and collected for liquor licenses, occupation, or trade licenses outside of the incorporated towns in the district of Alaska shall be deposited in the Treasury Department of the United States, there to remain as a separate and distinct fund, to be known as the "Alaska fund," and to be wholly devoted to the purposes hereinafter stated in the district of Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I now ask, Mr. President, that the committee amendments may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Territories will now be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, before the words "per cent," to strike out "10" and insert "5;" and in line 3, after the word "insane," to strike out "and destitute;" so as to read:

Five per cent of said fund, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be devoted to the care and maintenance of insane persons in said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 13, after the word "shall," to insert "in all cases;" so as to read:

The engineer officer of the board shall in all cases supervise the work of construction and see that the same is properly performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 13, after the word "trust," to insert:

In case a vacancy in the membership of said board occurs from death, resignation, removal, or other cause, such vacancy may be filled by a special election, upon ten days' notice, called by the remaining members of the board upon the petition of five qualified voters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, section 5, line 16, before the word "resident," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

That the clerk of the district court shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, in the division to which he is appointed and in which he resides, upon petition, as hereinafter specified, to establish by order in writing a school district at any camp, village, or settlement outside of the limits of any incorporated town, but such school district shall not embrace more than 40 square miles of territory nor contain less than twenty resident white children between the ages of 6 and 18 years.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to that amendment. It seems to me that twenty is a pretty large number. A very good school can be organized, I know, with a considerably less number—say twelve or fifteen.

Mr. NELSON. What would the Senator suggest?

Mr. TELLER. I would suggest "twelve."

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I will accept that amendment. There is no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

Mr. NELSON. It is to take the place of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

It is to strike out "thirty" and insert "twelve," instead of inserting "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he means to exclude the Indian children from these schools?

Mr. NELSON. Yes. The purpose of the bill is to leave them under the Interior Department, separate and distinct. These schools are intended for white children or civilized children of the Eskimos.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to interfere with the Senator in charge of the bill, but I thought in some sections of Alaska there might not be any Government schools under the Interior Department, and that it might be well to allow the Indian children to be included. I do not know, however, that this bill would prevent that.

Mr. NELSON. I will state to the Senator that the bill meets with the approval of Doctor Jackson, of the Bureau of Education, who is interested in the schools in Alaska. I submitted the bill to him, and he concurs in its provisions.

Mr. TELLER. I think that these schools should be maintained. I have no idea of abandoning them, and I do not believe that this bill will exclude them.

Mr. NELSON. Not necessarily.

Mr. TELLER. I hardly think it would.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, on page 7, section 5, line 19, after the word "office," to insert:

In case a vacancy in the membership of said board occurs from death, resignation, removal, or other cause, such vacancy may be filled by a special election, upon ten days' notice, called by the remaining members of the board upon the petition of five qualified voters.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Is there any regular rule about the order in which amendments shall be considered, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to make a motion to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. PETTUS. On page 12, line 4, I move to amend——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment, the Chair will state that there are some committee amendments preceding the point where the Senator desires to amend.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I will withhold the amendment until that point in the bill has been reached.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, on page 11, section 7, line 7, after the words "shall be," to strike out "on the same footing and be;" in line 8, after the words "provided for," to strike out "in the same manner as Indian schools in the States and Territories of the United States" and insert "by an annual appropriation;" and in line 13, after the word "Territories," to strike out "aforesaid" and insert "of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the schools specified and provided for in this act shall be devoted to the education of white children and children of mixed blood who lead a civilized life. The education of the Eskimos and Indians in the district of Alaska shall remain under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior, and schools for and among the Eskimos and Indians of Alaska shall be provided for by an annual appropriation, and the Eskimo and Indian children of Alaska shall have the same right to be admitted to any Indian boarding school as the Indian children in the States or Territories of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, section 8, line 25, after the words "insane person," to strike out "(naming him);" so as to read:

No person shall be adjudged insane or committed as such, except upon and pursuant to the following proceedings, to wit: Whenever complaint in writing is made by any adult person to a commissioner that there is an insane person at large in the commissioner's district, the commissioner shall at once cause such insane person to be taken into custody and to be brought before him, and he shall then immediately summon and impanel a jury of six male adults, residents of the district, to inquire, try, and determine whether the person so complained of is really insane.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama please state his amendment?

Mr. PETTUS. On page 12, section 8, line 4, after the words "jury of," I move to strike out "six" and insert "twelve;" so as to read: "a jury of twelve male adults." There can be no lawful jury of six to put a man in an insane asylum.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say, in reply to the Senator from Alabama, that this is not the trial of a criminal offense. It is simply an inquest to determine whether or not a man is insane. We have made the number of the jury six for the reason that in a great many mining camps it will be difficult to get a jury of twelve men.

Mr. PETTUS. It may be difficult, Mr. President, but it can not be done lawfully with less than twelve men, as has been decided over and over again.

Mr. NELSON. As I have stated, Mr. President, this does not refer to criminal cases, and I think there is no obstacle in the law to doing this. If a jury could be obtained of twelve men, there would be no objection to it; but, I repeat, that in a great many mining camps—and I have consulted with people in Alaska regarding it—it would be extremely difficult to get a larger jury than six men. I think the amendment, for that reason, ought not to be adopted.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the difficulty of obtaining six other men ought not to authorize the unlawful confinement of a citizen of the United States. It would be unlawful if he should be confined in a lunatic asylum on the verdict of six men. Six men are not a jury, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to controvert the position of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]; but, if I recollect correctly, in the States we commit men to asylums upon the certificate of two physicians. I apprehend that if there were physicians in Alaska who could be obtained for this purpose, the provision for such a jury might not be found in this bill.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is right. There have been and there are now laws all over the United States authorizing men to be committed to asylums upon the certificate of two physicians; but wherever such a law has been brought to the attention of the supreme court of the State, such commitment has been held to be unlawful and false imprisonment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know how that may be, but I know we are going right along doing that thing constantly in every city of New England at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 8, page 12, line 14, after the word "can," to strike out the words "without great difficulty;" so as to read:

And in case there is a physician or surgeon in the vicinity who can be procured, the commissioner shall cause such surgeon or physician to examine the person alleged to be insane, and after such examination to testify under oath before the jury in respect to the mental condition of said person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 12, line 20, after the word "offered," to strike out "or that can be readily procured;" and in line 23, after the word "evidence," to strike out "that may be procured;" so as to read:

All witnesses that may be offered shall be heard and shall be permitted to testify under oath in said matter, and after having heard all the evidence, the said jury shall retire to agree upon a verdict, and if the jury unanimously, by their verdict in writing, find that the said person so charged with being insane as aforesaid is really and truly insane and that he ought to be committed to the asylum or sanitarium aforesaid, and the commissioner approves such finding, he shall enter a judgment adjudging the said person to be insane and adjudging that he be at once conveyed to and thereafter properly and safely kept in the said asylum or sanitarium until duly discharged therefrom by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 13, line 22, after the word "proceedings," to strike out "from first to last;" so as to read:

And all the compensation, mileage, fees, and all other expenses and outlays incident to said proceedings shall be audited and allowed by the district judge of the division in which said proceedings are pending and had, and when so audited and allowed shall be paid by the clerk of the court in such division as the incidental expenses of the court are by him paid and from the same fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on pages 14 and 15, to strike out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the said commissioners shall be ex officio superintendents of the poor in their respective districts outside of the limits of incorporated towns, and as such they shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to grant temporary and limited relief in urgent cases and when absolutely necessary to indigent and destitute persons residing in the district outside of the limits of incorporated towns, and who are unable to provide themselves with the necessaries of life and have no relatives or friends to aid them in that behalf. If such indigent and destitute persons are not addicted to drunkenness or gambling the relief may be given directly to them; but if addicted to drunkenness or gambling the relief given shall consist in hiring board and lodging for them for a limited time. No more than $100 shall be allowed in any case in any period of three months. If the commissioner grants such relief he shall issue his order upon the clerk of the court for the division in which his district is situate, requiring the clerk to pay a specified sum, never more than $100, to the indigent and destitute person, if he be fit to receive the same, as hereinbefore defined, and if he be not so fit, then to the person who has been hired and employed by the commissioner to board and lodge such indigent and destitute person. The order shall specify for what purpose the same is given, and if for board and lodging it shall specify the time and the rate. The clerk of the court shall pay said order as a part of the incidental expenses of the court. In case of any person, resident in Alaska, who is hopelessly and permanently destitute and indigent, and who is always likely to remain such, permanent or continuous relief shall not be given by the court commissioner, but only by the judge of the district court, who shall have authority in his division in cases outside of incorporated towns to grant and allow such reasonable relief from time to time in each of such cases as the facts and circumstances may warrant. But no relief shall be granted at any time for a longer period than one year. The sum allowed for such relief by the judge shall be paid by the clerk of his division out of the funds in his hands as a part of the incidental expenses of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is an amendment renumbering section 10.

Mr. NELSON. "Section 10" should be stricken out and "section 9" inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is done without an order of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota who, I believe, has charge of the bill if he can state approximately how much per annum will be realized from these license taxes?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; and I shall be very glad to state it. I have a report here which shows that during the last fiscal year there was realized from these license and occupation taxes in the district of Alaska an aggregate of $330,257.64. Of this amount $128,163.04 went to the incorporated towns under existing law. Under existing law there are ten incorporated towns in Alaska, and they get all the license money collected in their towns. Outside of the incorporated towns the total amount would be $102,094.60, which would be effective under this bill to be applied to roads, schools, and the care of the insane.

Mr. MALLORY. One-quarter of it would go to the schools, I believe?

Mr. NELSON. Twenty-five per cent, or as much as may be necessary, for schools outside of the incorporated towns, 5 per cent for the care of the insane, and the balance for the construction of roads, bridges, and trails.

Mr. MALLORY. So I understand. I should also like to ask the Senator another question. Referring to page 11, section 7, I notice it is provided there by the amendment of the committee that—and schools for and among the Eskimos and Indians of Alaska shall be provided for by an annual appropriation.

Is that the practice now by the Government?

Mr. NELSON. That is what we now do in all the States and Territories outside of Alaska. They are provided for by an appropriation in the Indian appropriation bill. Under existing laws 50 per cent of this license money outside of incorporated towns may now be applied for educational purposes in general, but there is no provision for the establishment of school districts, and nothing is said as to whether it shall be devoted to white schools or to Indian schools. The plan of this bill is to leave the education of Indian children and Eskimos to be provided for in Alaska as it is provided for in the Territories and States.

The license money that is paid by the people of Alaska is their own money. It is a unique tax, not found anywhere else in the country. We felt that it is not right that that tax, paid by the people, should be applied to the education of the Indians and Eskimos when we do not so apply such taxes to that purpose anywhere else in the country. We felt that that small tax, paid by the white people of Alaska, should be devoted to roads, schools, and the care of the insane, and that the Government should provide for the Eskimos and the Indians there as it does in all other parts of the country.

Mr. MALLORY. The inquiry I wish to make is in regard to the principle on which it is proposed—and which probably has been practiced heretofore—to educate these Indians and Eskimos. With the other Indians of this country we have some treaty stipulations and have other arrangements whereby we probably are obligated to look after their education to some extent; but I do not understand that we have any such relations with the Indians and Eskimos of Alaska. I should like to ascertain on what principle we propose to pay money out of the Treasury of the United States for the education of these Indians with whom we have no treaties?

Mr. NELSON. I suppose it is on the same principle that we apply money to the education of the Indians throughout the country. The Indians and Eskimos are of the same class. They are in a certain measure the wards of the Government; and the Government of the United States has for years felt it its duty to take care of the Indians, look after them, to provide for them and for their schools, and their maintenance in various ways. We have a large number of Indian schools scattered throughout the country; and if the Senator will examine the Indian appropriation bill he will find that provision is made in that bill every year for the education of Indian children.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that perfectly, and I understand that there is an obligation on our part to do so.

Mr. NELSON. There is no technical legal obligation in the sense that it could be enforced in a court; but there is that great moral obligation that rests upon us in respect to these people as in respect to the Indians in other parts of the country.

Mr. QUARLES. I would call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to a verbal correction which I think perhaps might well be made, although it might not be considered necessary. At the top of page 2 there is this provision—

5 per cent of said fund, or so much thereof as may be needed.

One construction might be put upon that, that in addition to the 5 per cent you could draw out of the funds so much as may be needed.

Mr. NELSON. I think not. The phrase there is intended as a limitation. If the Senator will observe the remainder of that section, he will see that if that amount should not be needed for that purpose it would be available for roads and bridges.

Mr. QUARLES. I was going to suggest to the learned Senator that if he put in the phrase "or so much thereof as may be needed," immediately after the word "district," in the fourth line, it would obviate any possible doubt as to the construction of the clause.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I have no objection to that. The Senator can move the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 1, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "or so much thereof as may be needed;" and insert the same words after the word "district," in the fourth line.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be better to say "or so much of the 5 per cent as may be needed?"

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Or so much of the 5 per cent as may be needed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. QUARLES. On page 2, line 2, after the word "much," strike out "thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of such per cent."

Mr. GALLINGER. Of said per cent.

Mr. CULLOM. Of said per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill. On the same page, page 2, section 2, it is provided that "the said engineer officer shall, during the term of his said detail and appointment, reside in said district." I am afraid that will be construed to give him a legal residence there.

Our engineer officers, like other officers of the United States, wherever they go, maintain their own citizenship and residence in their States, as we do in ours. It is very important to them, not only in the matter of voting, with respect to which they do not want to be separated from the rest of their fellow-citizens, but in regard to the disposition of their property when they die, the place where the will has to be proved, and especially if a child of an engineer officer is a suitable person to be appointed to West Point or Annapolis from the State in which he lives, his Senator or Representative could not appoint the boy. So I suggest as a substitute for the word "reside" the word "abide." I suppose what the Senator means is that the officer shall be there while he is performing his duties.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the amendment. I suggest that we strike out "reside" and insert "abide."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes."

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We desire to call up for consideration next the bill (S. 3338) to amend and codify the laws relating to municipal corporations in the district of Alaska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 4, page 6, line 1, after the word "elected," to insert "and who shall take care that the ordinances and resolves of the council be faithfully executed;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That the said common council shall have and exercise the following powers:

First. To adopt rules and by-laws for their proceedings, and to elect one of their number president of the council, who shall also be ex officio mayor of the town and who when chosen shall continue to hold the position of president and ex officio mayor during the term for which the council was elected, and who shall take care that the ordinances and resolves of the council be faithfully executed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, page 7, line 14, after the word "property," to insert "of the person against whom the tax is levied;" and in line 16, after the word "value," to strike out the words "of the person against whom the tax is levied;" so as to read:

Seventh. To assess, levy, and collect a poll tax of not less than $2 nor more than $4 per year on all male residents over 21 and under 50 years of age who are not active members, serving without pay, of a volunteer fire company in the town. Such tax shall be a lien upon and may be collected from any real or personal property of the person against whom the tax is levied except wearing apparel and household furniture less than $300 in value.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, page 8, line 6, before the word "family," to insert "a;" in the same line, before the word "householder," to insert "a;" and in line 9, before the word "execution," to strike out "or" and insert "on;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That all property belonging to the municipality, all property used exclusively for religious, educational, and charitable purposes, and the household furniture of the head of a family or a householder not exceeding $200 in value, shall be exempt from such tax: Provided further, That the laws exempting certain property from levy and sale on execution shall not apply to said taxes or the collection of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 9, line 21, after the word "same," to insert "shall be transferred to the treasurer of said board;" so as to read:

All money available for school purposes, except for the construction and equipment of schoolhouses and the acquisition of sites for the same, shall be transferred to the treasurer of said board, shall be expended under the direction of said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 10, line 14, after the word "town," to insert "and to publish all ordinances;" so as to read:

Thirteenth. To take such action by ordinance, resolution, or otherwise, as may be necessary to protect and preserve the lives, the health, the safety, and the well-being of the people in the town and to publish all ordinances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 11, line 6, after the word "town," to insert:

Provided, That said treasurer shall pay over to the treasurer of the school district all moneys available for the maintenance of schools.

So as to read:

The treasurer appointed by the council shall be the custodian of all the moneys of the town: Provided, That said treasurer shall pay over to the treasurer of the school district all moneys available for the maintenance of schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 12, line 24, after the word "compensation," to insert:

Any officer of the town, whether elective or appointive, may be removed from office for malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office, by the district court, in proceedings initiated upon the complaint of a taxpayer, and in which the officer complained of shall have full opportunity to appear and defend himself.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, section 8, line 21, after the word "repealed," to insert:

And the provisions of this act shall apply to and govern all municipal corporations heretofore created in the district of Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. In line 9, page 5, before the word "Tuesday," I move to strike out "third" and insert "first;" and in line 10, after the word "of," to strike out "July" and insert "April;" so as to read: "On the first Tuesday in April."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL-LAND LAWS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I now desire to call up the bill (S. 2814) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the coal-land laws to the district of Alaska," approved June 6, 1900.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to make a brief statement with respect to the bill, and then I shall leave it in charge of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. The bill originally introduced by him was referred to the Interior Department. The Department reported a substitute, and the committee have recommended the substitute with the exception of one slight amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands will be stated.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That any person or association of persons qualified to make entry under the coal-land laws of the United States, who shall have opened or improved a coal mine or coal mines on any of the unsurveyed public lands of the United States in the district of Alaska, may locate the lands upon which such mine or mines are situated, in rectangular tracts containing 40, 80, or 160 acres, with north and south boundary lines run according to the true meridian, by marking the four corners thereof with permanent monuments, so that the boundaries thereof may be readily and easily traced. And all such locators shall, within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year from making such location, file for record in the recording district, and with the register and receiver of the land district in which the lands are located or situated, a notice containing the name or names of the locator or locators, the date of the location, the description of the lands located, and a reference to such natural objects or permanent monuments as will readily identify the same.

SEC. 2. That such locator or locators, or their assigns, who are citizens of the United States, may receive a patent to the lands located by presenting, at any time within three years from the date of such notice, to the register and receiver of the land district in which the lands so located are situated an application therefor, accompanied by a certified copy of a plat of survey and field notes thereof, made by a United States deputy surveyor or a United States mineral surveyor duly approved by the surveyor-general for the district of Alaska, and a payment of the sum of $10 per acre for the lands applied for; but no such application shall be allowed until after the applicant has caused a notice of the presentation thereof, embracing a description of the lands, to have been published in a newspaper in the district of Alaska published nearest the location of the premises for a period of sixty days, and shall have caused copies of such notice, together with a certified copy of the official plat or survey, to have been kept posted in a conspicuous place upon the land applied for and in the land office for the district in which the lands are located for a like period, and until after he shall have furnished proof of such publication and posting, and such other proof as is required by the coal-land laws: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize entries to be made or title to be acquired to the shore of any navigable waters within said district.

SEC. 3. That during such period of posting and publication, or within thirty days thereafter, any person or association of persons having or asserting any adverse interest or claim to the tract of land or any part thereof sought to be purchased shall file in the land office where such application is pending, under oath, an adverse claim, setting forth the nature and extent thereof, and such adverse claimant shall, within sixty days after the filing of such adverse claim, begin an action to quiet title in a court of competent jurisdiction within the district of Alaska, and thereafter no patent shall issue for such claim until the final adjudication of the rights of the parties, and such patent shall then be used in conformity with the final decree of such court therein.

SEC. 4. That all the provisions of the coal-land laws of the United States not in conflict with the provisions of this act shall continue and be in full force in the district of Alaska.

Mr. BURNHAM. In section 1, line 25, page 3, after the word "mines," I move to strike out the word "or" and to insert "are."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. On page 4, line 15, section 2, I move to strike out "may" and insert "shall."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. The whole amendment is a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have the report read. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from New Hampshire that I have no objection whatever to the bill, but I have objection to the bill which follows, creating an additional judge in the district of Alaska.

Mr. NELSON. That bill has not been called up.

Mr. KEAN. But it is the next bill to be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey calls for the reading of the report.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator does not call for the report in this case?

Mr. KEAN. I call for the report in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks for the reading of the report. The report will be read.

Mr. BURNHAM. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey desires the reading of the report on this coal bill?

Mr. KEAN. That is what I desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the request of the Senator from New Jersey. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, March 2, 1904.

Mr. NELSON. The balance is simply the bill which has just been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. And agreed to. It has already been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire a further reading of the report?

Mr. KEAN. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his request for the further reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the bill (S. 3336) to provide an additional district judge for the district of Alaska, and for other purposes, be next considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to consider the amendments now.

Mr. KEAN. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will let the amendments be considered now, and if, after the amendments have been agreed to, there should be any objection to the bill itself——

Mr. KEAN. I should like first to have the Senator from Indiana explain the necessity for this bill.

Mr. NELSON. We can explain it.

Mr. KEAN. I am opposed to creating useless offices.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that it will serve his purpose just as well if he will permit the bill to be perfected by the consideration of the amendments, and then when the bill is perfected, if that Senator or any other Senator has any objection to the bill, going to the merits of the measure, it will be explained and the discussion will proceed. I suggest that merely as a method of expedition. I hope the Senator will permit the amendments to be considered now, and if it suits his convenience just as well, we will discuss the bill afterwards.

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator had better explain it first, because I do not see any necessity for the bill, to begin with. Let us begin at the beginning and not at the end.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator see any objection at all to the method proposed of perfecting the bill?

Mr. KEAN. None whatever. I am opposed to an additional judge in Alaska.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand that.

Mr. KEAN. I do not see the necessity for it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Understanding the fact that the Senator is opposed to an additional judge in Alaska, or that other Senators may be opposed to it, I am merely submitting to the Senator whether it would not be better or serve his purpose just as well to permit the amendments to be considered and the bill to be perfected and then discuss the bill. If there is to be any extended discussion we will not press the bill to-day.

Mr. KEAN. Very well; I will allow it to go that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "divisions," to strike out:

The first division shall include all that part of the district of Alaska east of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude. The second division shall include all that part of the district of Alaska west of the one hundred and sixtieth degree of west longitude and north of Bristol Bay. The third division shall include all that part of the district of Alaska not within the said first and second divisions and south of a due east and west line running through the summit of Mentasta Pass. The fourth division shall include all that part of the district of Alaska not embraced in the first, second, and third divisions aforesaid.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Division No. 1 shall consist of all that part of the district of Alaska lying east of the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude. Division No. 2 shall consist of all that territory lying west of a line commencing on the Arctic coast at the one hundred and forty-eighth meridian; thence extending south along the easterly watershed of the Colville River to a point on the Rocky Mountain divide between the headwaters of Colville River on the north and west and the waters of the Chandlar on the south; thence southwesterly along the divide between the waters of the Colville River, the Kotzebue Sound, and Norton Sound on the north and west and the waters of the Yukon on the south to the one hundred and sixty-first meridian of west longitude; thence along said meridian to the Kuskokwim River; thence southwesterly along the center of the channel of said Kuskokwim River to the Bering Sea, the said division to include all the islands lying north of the fifty-ninth parallel of north latitude. Division No. 3 shall consist of all that territory lying south and west of the line starting on the coast of the Gulf of Alaska at the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude; thence northerly along said meridian to a point due east from Mount Allen; thence west to summit of Mount Allen; thence southwesterly along the southerly watershed of the headwaters of Tannana River, thence westerly along the divide between the waters of the Gulf of Alaska on the south and the waters of the Yukon on the north to the summit of Mount McKinley; thence continuing westerly along the divide between the waters of the Gulf of Alaska and Bristol Bay on the south and the waters of the Yukon and Kuskokwim on the north to the one hundred and fifty-ninth meridian of west longitude; thence northwesterly to the Kuskokwim River on the one hundred and sixty-first meridian of west longitude; thence southwesterly along the center of said river to Bering Sea, said division to include the Alaska Peninsula, the Aleutian Islands, and all islands along the coast of this district south and west of the said district and all lying south of the fifty-ninth parallel of north latitude. Division No. 4 shall consist of all that part of the district of Alaska lying east of the second division and north of the third division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 4, line 11, after the word "Valdez," to strike out "Kodiak, Dutch Harbor and at the most convenient and accessible place, to be determined by the judge," and insert "Unalaska, and Dillingham;" so as to read:

One general term of court shall be held each year at Valdez, Unalaska, and Dillingham, at the head of Bristol Bay, in the third division, and such additional terms at either of said places as the judge may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2 on page 5.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to move an amendment there, suggested by the Attorney-General in a letter I have. I move to strike out, after the word "stenographer," in line 2, page 5, the words "under the same terms and conditions as are or may be provided for district courts in the United States" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

At such compensation as shall be fixed by the district judge, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General.

So as to make the clause read:

Each of the judges is authorized and directed to hold such special terms of court as may be necessary for the public welfare or for the dispatch of the business of the court, at such times and places in the district as they or any of them, respectively, may deem expedient or as the Attorney-General may direct; and each shall have authority to employ interpreters and to make allowances for the necessary expenses of his court, and to employ an official court stenographer at such compensation as shall be fixed by the district judge, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor, which, by unanimous consent, is temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of proposed Alaskan legislation.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 2, page 5, line 24, after the word "same," to insert "except the money derived from licenses:" so as to read:

He shall also collect and receive all moneys arising from the fees of his office from licenses, fines, forfeitures, judgments, or on any other account authorized by law to be paid to or collected by him, and shall apply the same, except the money derived from licenses, to the incidental expenses of the proper division of the district court and the allowance thereof as directed in written orders, duly made and signed by the judge, and shall account for the same in detail, and for any balances on account thereof, under oath, quarterly, or more frequently if required, to the court, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 6, line 22, after the word "provided," to strike out "and also register of wills for the district;" so as to read:

He shall be ex officio recorder of instruments, as hereinafter provided, and shall establish secure offices where terms of his division of the court are held for the safe-keeping of his official records.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 25 on page 7.

Mr. NELSON. At the suggestion of the Attorney-General, after the word "attorneys," line 23, page 7, section 3, I move to insert "and one or more clerical assistants."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is that instead of assistant attorneys?

Mr. NELSON. It is for clerical assistants.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But does the provision for assistant attorneys stay in? I thought the bill provided for the appointment of assistant attorneys.

Mr. NELSON. The bill provides for the appointment of "one or more assistant district attorneys," but the Attorney-General suggests that one or more clerical assistants be provided for. This is an amendment suggested by the Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I move the following amendment, also in harmony with the other and recommended by the Attorney-General. After the word "attorneys," in line 25, I move to insert "and clerical assistants:" so as to read:

Who shall receive such compensation as the Attorney-General may fix, to be paid as other assistant United States district attorneys and clerical assistants are paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 11, on page 8, in section 4.

Mr. NELSON. On page 8, line 8, after the word "quarterly," at the suggestion of the Attorney-General, I move to insert the following:

Duly verified by the oath of the commissioner or deputy marshal rendering the account.

So as to read:

That an accurate detailed account of all fees earned and expenses incurred by commissioners and deputy marshals shall be prepared in duplicate, quarterly, duly verified by the oath of the commissioner or deputy marshal rendering the account, and forwarded to the clerk for the proper division of the district court and approved by the judge thereof, if found to be in accordance with law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 4, line 19, page 8.

Mr. NELSON. At the suggestion of the Department of Justice. I move, in line 13, after the word "Justice," to insert "for revision;" so as to read:

After approval by the judge the original of each such account shall be forwarded by the clerk to the Department of Justice for revision, and the duplicate filed in the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. At the suggestion of the Department of Justice I move, in line 15, after the word "year," to insert "or in excess of that rate for a less period;" so as to read:

All net fees earned in excess of the sum of $3,000 per calendar year or in excess of that rate for a less period by any commissioner or deputy marshal shall be annually paid to the clerk of the proper division of the court, for the use of the United States, such payment to be accompanied by a verified detailed statement of such deputy or commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, on page 8, line 20, after the words "Sec. 5," to strike out the following:

That the marshal for each division of the district of Alaska shall reside during his term of office at the place designated as the residence of the judge of such division of the court.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That four United States marshals shall be appointed for the district, one of whom shall be assigned to each district; the marshal for each division shall reside during his term of office at the place designated as the residence of the judge of such division of the court.

Mr. NELSON. On page 9, line 1, I move to strike out the word "district" and insert the word "division;" so as to read:

That four United States marshals shall be appointed for the division, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 11, after the words "Sec. 7," to strike out the following:

That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of July, 1904. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are repealed.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit or terminate the term of office of either of the judges, district attorneys, or marshals now serving in Alaska; but each shall serve out the term for which he was appointed regardless of this act. The judge, district attorney, and marshal now serving in the third division of said district shall hereafter have their residence and hold their respective offices in the fourth division created by this act: Provided, That the President may in his discretion change the assignment of any of said officers from one division to another.

Mr. NELSON. At the suggestion of the Attorney-General, in line 18, I move to strike out the words "regardless of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "unless sooner removed;" so as to read:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit or terminate the term of office of either of the judges, district attorneys, or marshals now serving in Alaska; but each shall serve out the term for which he was appointed unless sooner removed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 23, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of July, 1904. In so far only as the provisions of this act are in conflict with other or prior acts, the other or prior acts are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill having been perfected——

Mr. NELSON. I have two more amendments to offer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. NELSON. They should come in before section 8 in the amended bill. These are amendments suggested by the Department of Justice. First, I offer an amendment as an independent section, to come in preceding the last section of the bill.

The SECRETARY. After section 7 insert:

SEC. 8. That section 771 of chapter 80, title 2, of said act approved June 6, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the Attorney-General is authorized and directed to prescribe a schedule of fees for the services rendered by United States commissioners acting as ex officio probate judges.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I also offer an amendment, at the suggestion of the Attorney-General, as an independent section, to come in next after the one just adopted.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following additional section, to follow the section just agreed to:

SEC. 9. That when, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, it will be impossible for the accounts of any court official or other person whose account pertains to United States courts in Alaska to be transmitted to the Department of Justice within the period prescribed by law, the Attorney-General may modify, as he may deem proper, any requirement of law concerning the time when such accounts shall be rendered and transmitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill now having been perfected, I think it proper, in view of the question asked by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], to make a brief statement, which statement will be amplified if the occasion demands.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator from Indiana proceeds, I should like to make an inquiry. Is the purpose of the Senator from New Jersey to oppose this measure so that there is to be discussion and debate on it?

Mr. KEAN. I certainly am opposed to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not think there will be a great deal of debate. I do not know, but I imagine not. I think, after the large general reasons are given for this bill, the Senator from New Jersey will not want to address the Senate at any great length.

Mr. FORAKER. I only wanted to learn how much time it was likely to occupy. If it is going to lead to protracted debate——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My statement will not occupy three minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the district of Alaska is one judicial district, divided into three divisions. The three judges not only have judicial functions as judges elsewhere have, but many of them have administrative functions. For example, under the scheme of government of the district of Alaska a variety of licenses are provided for. Those licenses must be granted by the judges. Oftentimes they require considerable and extended investigation. Commissioners must be appointed for this, that, and the other; fees must be accounted for by the commissioners and clerks, and audited by the judges. So the judges in Alaska not only have their judicial duties to perform, but a large variety of administrative functions as well. That is the first point.

The second point is that these three divisions cover an immense tract of territory. One illustration goes to show and will bring the attention of the Senate to the extreme difficulty of a judge properly performing his duties and of justice being properly administered there. In one division—I think it is the third or the second—the judge, in traveling from one place to another in holding court, by the nearest possible route, must travel 1,400 miles, and if he travel by the easier route he must travel 2,800 miles.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand from the Senator from Indiana that this bill does not propose to divide any other district than the third judicial district of Alaska?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not hear the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I say to the Senator from Indiana that, if I understand this bill, it creates four judicial districts in Alaska.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does.

Mr. KEAN. And the only district that is divided is the third district.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will find that that is inaccurate.

Mr. KEAN. It is practically accurate, though it may not be exactly, so far as distance is concerned.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will make this general statement, and if there is any detail desired, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who was on the subcommittee which went to Alaska and investigated these conditions on the ground, can, from that personal investigation, answer the Senator more definitely. I merely want to make this broad, general statement.

I say that in one district, for example, there must be traveled by the nearest route 1,400 miles, and by the other route, which is the easier route, 2,800 miles.

These two statements, Mr. President, upon their face indicate that there should be greater facilities for the administration of justice and for the discharge of the administrative duties which are laid upon the judges in Alaska.

It is said—and that is the only argument I have heard against this bill, which I say those two statements on their face sufficiently answer—that no new cases were brought within a certain time—within perhaps the past year—and that, therefore, no additional judges are required. But one of the very reasons why no cases were brought was because of the impracticability of men who might want causes to be tried, or who might have grievances to lay before the court, or have other business, of getting at the court.

These are the broad, general outlines of the reasons for this bill, Mr. President. If the Senator from New Jersey has any objection to the bill I think the committee will be very glad indeed to have him state it. I am satisfied that the subcommittee—the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]—will answer the Senator in detail.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana knows very well that I have no objection to the bill itself, but only to dividing Alaska in four districts. The present condition of affairs in Alaska, so far as I can find from the Attorney-General's report, is entirely satisfactory. I am informed that there are no cases undecided in the third district of Alaska, that all the judicial business has been attended to, and that no necessity is shown for dividing the district.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the point which the Senator from New Jersey has made had force with me, as it must with every other Senator and every man, when first stated, to wit, that the business of that district had been attended to, and that no new case had been filed. If that is true, it is answered by the very fact of this bill, that it is practically impossible for a large number of residents or citizens of Alaska to get justice because they have no opportunity to get to the courts, the distances being so great and travel almost impossible save during four months in the year.

Mr. KEAN. I have not the report of the Attorney-General in regard to the third district of Alaska before me. His report is printed, but it fails to show any returns whatever from that district. Therefore I can not answer what the Senator says. I suppose that some business was done in that district during the last year; but I am informed that there is not a single undecided case in that district at the present time. Probably the Senator from Minnesota can tell me as to that.

Mr. NELSON. When the Senator gets through, I will state the facts in the case.

Mr. KEAN. I shall be very glad to hear what the Senator from Minnesota has to say regarding the subject.

Mr. NELSON. I can not limit myself to just exactly a question. When the Senator is through, I will answer him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] that he make to the bill all the objections he has, so that when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] rises to answer him, he will have all the objections which exist to this bill before him and answer them. I think the whole thing can be done very briefly.

Mr. KEAN. I yield now to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, to understand the merits of this bill and the necessity for it one must be familiar with the conditions which prevail in Alaska. As a matter of fact, whatever civil government they have in Alaska, is practically a government in the hands of the judges and court commissioners. We have a governor in Alaska with scarcely any power. He is commander in chief of the militia, and they have no militia. He sends an annual report here to Washington. He is empowered to look after the seal fisheries and has some other little duties of a merely nominal character; but the whole civil government, as I have said, is in the hands of the district judges and the court commissioners.

Among the duties of the judges are these: First, they, in addition to the judicial functions which ordinarily pertain to judges, have the appointment of court commissioners. It is their duty to divide their several districts into what are known as "recording districts."

The court commissioners are not only performing what might properly be called the duties of court commissioners, but they are also ex officio probate judges, ex officio justices of the peace, ex officio notaries public, ex officio coroners, ex officio recorders and registers of deeds. In fact, they perform all the duties of county officers in organized States.

They also have in Alaska a system of license fees. In addition to the ordinary liquor licenses they have a system of occupation and trade licenses. The applications for such licenses must be made to the district judge in each case and must be considered and passed upon by him. He must pass not only on liquor licenses, but also upon a multitude of trade and occupation licenses, as Senators will see if they will examine the report of the committee. Then the judge in each division has to divide his division into recording divisions and appoint a court commissioner to each division; and the distances which judges have to travel to perform their duties in that country are immense.

Besides, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the judges there are not able to perform the duties imposed upon them.

The statement which has been made that the report of the Attorney-General shows that there was no business performed in the third division during the last year is incorrect. The statement not only indicates that there was not a single criminal case in that district, but it indicates that there was not a single civil case, which I know to be not true.

Last summer the subcommittee of the Committee on Territories, of which I was a member, were at the little town of Rampart, on the Yukon River, while the district court was in session.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether any report was received from that district in time to go into the published report of the Attorney-General?

Mr. NELSON. I think not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understood, Mr. President, that, owing to the great distances to be traveled there, no report was received in season to be published by the Department. I am told that is the fact.

Mr. KEAN. If no report has been received to show that it is necessary, that, Mr. President, is so much the more reason for not passing this bill.

Mr. NELSON. I will state some other reasons for passing the bill, and, if Senators will allow me, I will go to the map hanging here on the wall of the Senate Chamber and illustrate.

The subcommittee were attending court last summer at Rampart, on the Yukon River, about there [indicating on the map]. We found there, when we were attending the court of Judge Wickersham, a court commissioner who said it took him twenty-nine days to come down there from the Koyukuk River to attend court. He had to go all the way down that river, a distance of 600 miles, and then up the Yukon River 300 miles, and he had to spend twenty-nine days to get there to attend court. While the court commissioner was here in the city he informed me that he had twenty-nine cases where the men had been bound over to appear before the district court for various offenses. He tried to get the judge to go to the Koyukuk River to hold court, but the judge did not go there; and what to do the commissioner did not know. Finally he got the men to go into court and plead guilty to a minor offense—an offense within the jurisdiction of court commissioners—and so the twenty-nine cases were disposed of.

Let me show on this map the territorial divisions of Alaska. This [indicating] is the one hundred and forty-first meridian of longitude, which divides Alaska from the Yukon district in Canada. This strip here [indicating] is the Alexander Archipelago, and the strip which was in dispute between us and England and which has recently been settled. This [indicating] constitutes the first judicial division of Alaska, both under this bill and under the existing law.

The other two divisions of Alaska are divided under existing law by this blue line here [indicating], the division between the second district and the third district. By this bill we propose to make four divisions, dividing them in the way shown by the red lines on this map [indicating].

The first division remains as it is in the existing law, the second division includes all that part of Alaska west of the red line, and the third division includes all of Alaska south of this red line [indicating]. The fourth division includes the part which is here shown [indicating].

If you will observe, Senators, these lines are somewhat irregular, because they follow the mountain divides in order that the different creeks and mining camps between the divides may be all in one judicial district. So here this irregular crooked line [indicating] follows the divide between the waters that flow into the Pacific Ocean and the waters that flow into the Yukon River.

Judge Wickersham last summer held court at Rampart, on the Yukon River. After he got through at Rampart, which is about there [indicating], he had to go down the Yukon River 900 miles or more to St. Michael, and there he was met by a United States revenue cutter, which took him around Bering Sea to Bristol Bay, right in there [indicating], and the revenue cutter had to stay there until he got through.

After he concluded his work at Bristol Bay the revenue cutter took him down by way of Dutch Harbor up to Valdez, where he held court. His headquarters were at Eagle, on the Yukon River, and in order to reach Valdez from Eagle the judge must either travel up the Yukon River and the Lewis River, which is its chief tributary, by steamboat and then across the White Pass Railway to Skagway, and from there by ocean steamship by way of Juneau and Sitka to Valdez, a distance of over 1,400 miles, or else he would be obliged to go down the Yukon River to St. Michael, which is at this point on the map [indicating], and from there by way of Dutch Harbor to Valdez by steamship, which is a distance of over 2,800 miles. To reach Unalaska or Dutch Harbor from Eagle he is obliged to go over the same route, a distance of over 2,200 miles, and from there he is obliged to take steamship to Bristol Bay at this point [indicating], an additional distance of 417 miles.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. I shall be very glad to have Senators ask me any questions they please.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I merely desire to say that Judge Wickersham is perhaps one of the best judges who has ever been sent to Alaska.

Mr. NELSON. He is a very good judge, indeed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. He is a judge of splendid ability, of undoubted integrity, and of vast industry. He advised me when recently here that he was over a year—if I recollect, some thirteen or fourteen months—in going to all the points to which he was obliged to go in his judicial district.

Mr. NELSON. Judge Wickersham ought to have gone up the Koyukuk River, as I described, where those twenty-nine cases were to be tried, but it was impossible for him to go. He would have to go down the Yukon River 200 miles, and then up around this narrow river here [indicating], which is only navigable during extreme high water.

There is another fact to which I want to call the attention of Senators, and that is that any additional expenses incurred for the salaries of an additional judge, marshal, clerk, and attorney will be more than saved by the saving that is made in the traveling expenses of these officials under existing conditions. If you count the traveling fees of the United States marshal, the United States clerk, the attorney, and the judge, with their headquarters at Eagle, going from there all over that Territory and attending to their functions, you will find their traveling fees amount to a great deal more than will the salaries if this new district is established.

Alaska is a much neglected country. It is our duty to give the citizens of Alaska all the facilities possible under their limited scheme of government.

If the judges of Alaska, like the judges of other Territories, simply had judicial functions to perform and had a limited amount of travel, if they could travel as do the judges in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, two judges could do the work; but under the conditions in that Territory, the immense distances, the very short summer of three or four months—which is the only season when they can get about in the district—it is an utter impossibility for the judge of the third judicial district to go around and hold court in places where he ought to hold court in that district.

If Senators saw the conditions up there as the subcommittee saw them, I do not think a voice would be raised against this bill. The little civil government they have in Alaska is through the judges and court commissioners. If you do not give the people there those facilities in full measure, you deprive them of the benefit of what little civil government they have.

Mr. President, I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate any longer. If Senators desire any further information, I shall be glad to give it to them; but I sincerely trust, on behalf of the people of Alaska, that the Senate will pass this bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I want to add to what the Senator from Minnesota has said, as bearing upon the question whether there is business in that district to be done, what Judge Wickersham testified to before the subcommittee when we met him at Rampart, where he was holding court. When asked about this proposition, he said:

> It will have to be done soon. This is a very large judicial division. It extends from the British line to the outer Aleutian Islands—from the Pacific to the Arctic Ocean. The judge is compelled to travel all the time when he is on the coast. It is almost impossible for the business of the court in the interior of the district to receive attention. Heretofore it has received fair attention, but the business is rapidly increasing, and I recommend the creation of another judicial division by dividing the third judicial division—

Then he goes on to state how the division should be made.

Mr. CULLOM. And you have made it accordingly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. We have made it accordingly, and Judge Wickersham has approved this bill.

In addition to that, in this Yukon basin lies the great, broad, mining region of Alaska. There are probably 100,000 square miles of territory watered by the creeks which flow into the Yukon River, upon every one of which are found deposits of gold, and in all of that district we did not find a man who would not abandon his claim rather than to fight for it because of the expenses of getting it to court. Every miner we met said: "We will abandon our claims before we will bring a suit, because we can not get into the courts without going great distances, and the expense of going is prohibitive in its character."

That complaint met us the whole length of the Yukon River for 1,500 miles. It met us in the Aleutian Islands, and when we came around to Valdez, the city which is located on Valdez Bay, on the southern coast of Alaska, we were met by the bar there, who told us that they had not been able to get an order during the entire season. There are Senators present in the Chamber who know that the court that was held by Judge Wickersham only came there after the assembling of Congress last November, and at least one Senator was detained there during the November session to try cases.

There is no reason, as it seemed to the committee, why the people of Alaska should be subjected to this hardship, and we are a unit in recommending the passage of this bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I express the hope that the Senator from New Jersey, who asked for some reasons for the passage of the bill, is probably satisfied by the reasons given by the two members of the subcommittee, its chairman [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]; and will permit the Senate to pass the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has stated in regard to what Judge Wickersham said; but the judge did not say that there was any immediate necessity for this bill. He did say that eventually he thought the district would have to be divided, but as the subcommittee that visited Alaska, and for whom I have profound respect, seem to think that this is the proper time to take such action—although I can not see from anything that I have read in the report of the Attorney-General or from any information I have had that this legislation is necessary—I will withdraw my opposition.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to make an inquiry as to how many new officials this bill creates?

Mr. NELSON. It creates only the following: One judge, one United States attorney, one marshal, and one clerk of the court, and, of course, such deputies as the clerk and the marshal may need. It does not create any other officers.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does it create any new officers in the courts that are already held?

Mr. NELSON. None at all. It leaves those courts and their officers just as they are.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELEGATE IN CONGRESS FROM ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senate next to consider, in Alaskan legislation, Calendar No. 1131, being the bill (S. 3339) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska.

Mr. KEAN. That bill can not be passed now.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think that bill can pass without a good deal of discussion.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let it be taken up and made the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; let it be made the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I thought I had the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to say that there are several Senators who have serious question with regard to this bill who are not here to-day, and who I know will desire to take part in the discussion of it when it is considered.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the bill being taken up and made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is unfinished business now.

Mr. FORAKER. However that may be, it is a bill, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has suggested, that will be debated at more or less length. I am not willing to delay my motion longer; and as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has indicated that he would be willing to let the bill go over if there was debate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I indicated to the Senator from Ohio that I would not press the bill now if it would involve long discussion. I had supposed that the unfinished business which was before the Senate when the unanimous consent for the consideration of these Alaskan bills was given for to-day was disposed of. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the title of the bill which is the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I had forgotten that for the moment. I should not want in any wise, of course, to interfere with that bill. I will not press the Alaskan Delegate bill to-day.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, is there not some method by which this bill may have the right of way at some future time for discussion in the Senate? It is a very important bill, and one in which the people of Alaska feel a deeper interest, perhaps, than almost any other bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That can only be done by unanimous consent, for we can do anything by unanimous consent. This bill might be made the unfinished business after the public building bill, with which I would not think of interfering, is disposed of; but, of course, there would not be unanimous consent given for that, so it is useless to ask it.

Mr. PATTERSON. You can not know that until you try.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have a bare suspicion that there will be objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. You may be sure of it.

Mr. TELLER. I want to call attention to the fact that we gave unanimous consent the other day to consider Alaskan bills to-day. I think we have got the consent of the Senate——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We have.

Mr. FORAKER. That is subject to the rules of the Senate, under which rules I have the right to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the Senator has that right——

Mr. FORAKER. I understand I have.

Mr. TELLER. Until we dispose of the Alaskan bills; and if we can not dispose of them to-day, under the unanimous-consent order, they go over. We have got the entire day, if we want it.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the right to move an executive session is a privileged motion.

Mr. TELLER. It is not, Mr. President, unless the Senator chooses to do what has never been done in this Senate, that I know of, while we are acting under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that all unanimous-consent agreements to consider legislative business are made subject to the right of a Senator to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not pretend to be as familiar with the rules as most Senators are, and I may be in error about it; but that has always been my understanding. I have had that motion made at my expense a number of times since I have been in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I doubt that very much. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. FORAKER. I make the motion for an executive session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The language of the unanimous-consent agreement looks as though the Senator from Colorado might be right about this. The unanimous-consent is:

That on Thursday, March 10, after the routine morning business, the Senate would consider the Alaskan bills for that day——

Mr. TELLER. "Only."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes—

only, not to interfere with appropriation bills, and that at 2 o'clock that day the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily for that purpose.

That is the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FORAKER. Rule XXII says——

Mr. TELLER. We know what the rule is.

Mr. FORAKER. Apparently we do not.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, we do.

Mr. FORAKER. I will read it:

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day certain,
To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business.

It might just as well be said because we have unanimous consent to consider Alaskan bills that we can not move to adjourn or we can not move to take a recess. I am reading each motion in the order in which it is stated in the rules of the Senate. I may be mistaken; and, inasmuch as the Senator thinks I am, I will modify what I said a while ago; but my impression is that this motion has been made at my expense a time or two. By that I simply mean that when I had unanimous consent for the consideration of legislative business, it being protracted beyond what was anticipated and important executive business being on hand to be considered, that motion has been made, and I have always had to yield to it under this identical rule. At any rate, I make the motion for an executive session.

Mr. TELLER. I want simply to say that, of course, the Senator can make that motion. He can set aside any unanimous-consent agreement, if the Senate at any time wants to do that; but I recall no case, except one, in which that attempt has been made since I have been in the Senate, and that did not succeed. There has been a uniform rule that we would carry out in letter and spirit, although not obliged to do so, any unanimous-consent agreement. Of course the Senator can make his motion, and the Senate can dispose of it in any way they see fit, but I do not believe that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a matter over which the Chair has no control.

Mr. TELLER. But I do not believe there will be many more unanimous consents granted in the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to be put in the attitude of interfering with a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. TELLER. That is what you are doing.

Mr. FORAKER. I am either right or I am wrong. If I am wrong, I will withdraw the motion. If I am right, I want to insist upon my right without being subjected to criticism.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to say one word about this matter. Does the Senator from Colorado contend that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate had to stay in session to-day until all the Alaskan bills were disposed of? Suppose it came time for adjournment?

Mr. TELLER. The unanimous consent was for this day only, meaning of course until the time of adjournment. There has never been any sticking in the bark or pettifogging in the Senate about the rules. If we were through now with the Alaskan bills, anything else could come up, or if those in charge of the bill should ask to have it laid aside, I suppose that could be done.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Speaking for myself, I have no desire to have the bill laid aside. I prepared the bill and spent some time on it, and I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that I never introduce a bill or prepare a bill and spend time on it for the fun of it. I mean just what the bill means, and for myself I believe in passing the bill, and want it passed.

Mr. TELLER. So do I. It is one of the bills which I supposed we had agreed should be considered to-day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the bill has been favorably reported by the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman.

Mr. TELLER. It was just as much to be before the Senate as any other bill, and why a Senator should have the privilege of violating, as I think myself, the spirit and the letter of the unanimous-consent agreement, I do not understand. I understand he can make the motion——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course I can make it.

Mr. TELLER. Because anybody can decline to accept a unanimous-consent agreement; but it would be a new chapter in our history.

Mr. FORAKER. I think it is a matter we ought to have an understanding about. When I consent to join in a unanimous consent for the consideration of legislative business, I have never understood and do not understand now, and will not, unless there is a ruling to the contrary, that I am thereby cutting myself off from the right to join with other Senators in proceeding to the consideration of important and pressing executive business that may not have been foreseen at that time or may have arisen after the unanimous-consent agreement was made. I understand that we always understand when we make a unanimous-consent agreement that we have reserved the right to move to adjourn, to adjourn to a day certain, to take a recess, or to go into executive session.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I supposed I had the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut did have the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now, these unanimous-consent agreements——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment, inasmuch as I have but a word to add? I was not aware that I was interfering with the Senator from Connecticut. I thought I had the floor. I thought I had been recognized. If not, I want to say a word.

As to these bills, I have never read them, but I am very much interested in the general subject of a Delegate not only for Alaska, but for Porto Rico, and whenever that bill comes up I want to discuss the question, and it is going to take time. It will take more time than we have this afternoon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is clear, even if the Senator did not want to go into executive session, that it is absolutely impossible to pass this bill to-day. It is clear to everybody that there is going to be extended discussion here, and that the discussion upon this matter will take a collateral direction. Therefore I will not press the bill, because we can not get it through to-day.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is supposed to have the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I have the floor, I should like to make a few remarks about the unanimous-consent agreement.

I do not think anything is gained in the Senate by asking for unanimous-consent agreements in a very thin Senate, and then pressing them against the understanding of Senators who were present at the time unanimous consent was obtained. If I am not very much mistaken, and if I am the Senator from Indiana will correct me, when that consent was obtained I asked him if he intended to include this bill, and whether it would be pressed to-day, and was informed, according to my recollection, that he did not intend to press this bill to-day. I certainly did not understand that this bill was to be considered to-day under the unanimous-consent agreement, as I understood it.

Mr. TELLER. I did.

Mr. PATTERSON. So did I.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is not worth while to attempt to be technical about these matters and to press a unanimous-consent agreement against the understanding of Senators as to what that unanimous-consent agreement embraces.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Everybody in this Chamber who asks for unanimous consent knows that in order to get unanimous consent he has to get it. When this question came up objection was made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. Later in the day, after reviewing the whole matter, the Senator from Maryland very graciously and courteously permitted us to have unanimous consent. The general understanding in the talks with Senators was, as stated on the floor when the unanimous-consent agreement was asked for, that these were bills of pressing and practical importance and would not involve discussion or opposition. I so stated openly, and if any person asked me privately I so stated privately. Even if that statement had not been made, I will say, as chairman of the committee, that in view of the fact that it is perfectly clear that there is going to be extended discussion upon this matter and that the bill can not be passed to-day, especially in view of what the Senator from Ohio says about the breadth of the discussion he desires to make in this matter, it would not be wise to press the bill to-day.

The Senate has been very good to the Committee on Territories in giving it this day, and the Senate has been extremely good to us to pass three or four bills here to-day, and in view of what is perfectly clear to everybody, that the day would be consumed in discussion without progressing a single step, I shall not press the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is very plain that the Senator from Indiana who is chairman of the committee and has this matter in charge has secured the passage of those bills which he thinks important, and those which others of us think more important are now to be sidetracked.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. TELLER. That is the situation substantially as I understand it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think perhaps a more accurate statement would be that the committee called up the bills in the order of their importance, but also the bills which would provoke no resistance. Therefore the judicial bill came last, because it might bring some resistance. Immediately when that was through I called up the Delegate bill. It was not a question of calling up those bills which the committee considered important and sidetracking the others. It was because of what was stated in the request for unanimous consent that we had bills which would provoke no resistance.

Those we have brought up, and with respect to the ones that do provoke resistance we have to do what must be done under the circumstances—let them go over. I would not have got unanimous consent if I had not stated that they were bills which were of practical moment and would not provoke resistance.

Mr. TELLER. The unanimous consent was not obtained upon any theory that the chairman would withhold some bills——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. TELLER. Or that we should cease when such bills as he was interested in had been passed. I have a greater interest in the bill that is still unpassed, and believe quite as much good will come to the people of Alaska by its passage as any other bill which has been passed, and I believe it is demanded in the best interest of the people. I believe it is the duty of the Senate to pass that bill, and if there is opposition to it I do not see why we should not have that opposition presented to-day just as well as at some other time.

The Senator from Indiana knows very well—at least I think he does—that if he had said "I propose to call up certain bills, but there is one bill"—naming it—"which I do not," he would not have gotten consent. And if he privately gave any assurance that he would not call it up, it was, speaking mildly, hardly fair to us who sat by and gave our consent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, that would hardly be fair.

Mr. TELLER. This may not be the most important question, but I should like to know hereafter, when I give my consent that a bill may be taken up at a certain time or that a day shall be devoted to some particular interest, whether I am going to be at the mercy of any Senator who moves to adjourn, improperly and out of time, and claims that it is a privileged motion, or who, in order to displace the unanimous consent, moves that the Senate go into executive session. If that is to be the way, we might as well abandon all efforts to do business by virtue of unanimous-consent agreements, because we shall cease to do business in that way in a very short time.

Every Senator who has been here any length of time knows that it is very desirable to do business in this way, and I am very anxious myself to maintain that rule unbroken and undisturbed. If anything happens, as the Senator from Ohio suggested, then it is always within the power of the Senate to withdraw its unanimous consent by the same method. Having set down by unanimous consent a bill for a certain day, the Senate may, by unanimous consent, say, "We will dispose of it some other day, and we will now take up some other matter." The Senate is not tied up except it is no longer at the mercy of one individual, nor is it at the mercy for that particular time even of the majority. Unanimous-consent agreements can not be enforced except by the consent and good faith of those who make them, and it does not make any difference whether the Senator approves of it or not if he did not declare his opposition, and it does not make any difference whether he was here or not when it was done.

The case I refer to was where a Senator said, "I was not here when it was done, and if I had been here I should not have agreed to it." That is the only case I recall where there was an attempt to set aside a unanimous-consent agreement, and it was not done.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I cooperated with the Senator from Indiana in securing this unanimous-consent agreement——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I understood that I had the floor, and I made the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, which motion was stated by the Chair. Then I withheld it out of courtesy to Senators who wanted to say something. To what extent am I to be regarded as withholding that motion—so that there may be a general debate? As I understand, I have the right to press the motion at any time. If the Senator from Colorado wants to speak briefly, I shall not object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to talk briefly.

Mr. FORAKER. But I do not want, for reasons the Senator can well appreciate, to have the Senate go into a general discussion that will occupy the whole afternoon.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will occupy but a few moments.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I withhold the motion.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I cooperated with the Senator from Indiana in securing unanimous consent for this day for the consideration of Alaskan bills. When he made the request, prior to the consent being given, objection was made by some Senators on this side of the Chamber, who objected to setting aside special days. At his request I interviewed those Senators and succeeded in removing the objection.

Now, I want to say that under those circumstances I have a right to insist, so far as I properly may, upon my understanding of that unanimous-consent agreement being carried out, and that was that this day should be devoted to the consideration of these five bills that pertain to the district of Alaska. I wish to say that this is the most important of the entire five, more important to the people of Alaska than either one or all of the other four bills which have already received the sanction of the Senate.

Alaska is an immense stretch of country. It is eight or ten thousand miles, and some portions of it are more than that, away from the capital. It has no legislative body of its own. It is utterly impossible for it to attend to its local business by means of any local legislative body.

The result of it is that it must depend for the transaction of its business upon what is done here in the city of Washington, and the Senators who comprised the subcommittee will bear me out that wherever we went in Alaska, wherever they met us and discussed the need of the district, the first and the loudest demand was made to be represented in Washington by some properly constituted agent, and that agent was a Delegate, who would represent the people of that district, who would have a right upon the floor of one of the bodies of Congress, in order that the necessities of that great stretch of territory and its sixty or seventy-five thousand people might receive proper consideration from those who hold in their hands the destinies of that Territory.

Mr. President, no other section of outlying territory controlled by the United States bears the same relation to the United States that Alaska does. Whether they are our island possessions or whether they are on the mainland, they have either local legislatures to attend to their local business or they have representatives here at the Capitol; and in most of the instances there are both. But Alaska has neither a local legislature nor has it an agent who legally represents it and who may go to the President or come to Congress and speak by authority and make known the wants of the people.

Mr. President, this measure, above all the rest, should receive the immediate consideration of this body, in order, if it is possible, to secure a law by the present Congress, and at this session of the present Congress, that will enable them to be represented in Washington by a Delegate properly chosen.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to and shall not detain the Senate for more than a moment, and that only because some reference has been made here to the obtaining of the unanimous-consent agreement.

It is true I am very much indebted, and so is the committee, to the junior Senator from Colorado, who was a member of the subcommittee and cooperated in getting the unanimous-consent agreement and aided the committee very much in that, as he does in all the business transacted before that committee.

But I call the attention of the senior Senator from Colorado and the junior Senator from Colorado to the fact that when this unanimous consent was asked it was stated:

> These Alaskan bills will, all together, occupy perhaps no more than two hours. They really must be disposed of. They are on concerns of immediate importance.

Then I went on to explain why it was I had deferred the prior day set aside by unanimous consent. When the Senator from Maryland objected that reason was given why the unanimous consent was asked for. The Senator from Maryland pointed out that we ought not to dispose a week in advance of the time of the Senate. Then this language was used:

The reason why I ask unanimous consent for this legislation at all is that they are bills which undoubtedly will not be objected to. They are things which concern practical matters there, such as municipal corporations, schools, and the building of roads. I hope the explanation is satisfactory to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Suppose when we commenced upon the bills this afternoon a Senator had objected to a provision in the first bill and had precipitated a discussion?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would have passed that one over.

Mr. PATTERSON. Would the Senator immediately have abandoned it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not immediately.

Mr. PATTERSON. Suppose when the second bill was reached the same thing had occurred. Would the Senator have abandoned it, too?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me answer the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. They were all on the same footing when this unanimous consent was given.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. There was no reservation, and there should have been no reservation in the mind of the chairman or any other Senator.

Mr. TELLER. There could not have been.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer the Senator from Colorado. When the Senator from New Jersey objected to the judge bill, I said that if after explanation it appeared that the Senator from New Jersey proposed to resist it very strenuously it would not be pressed. The point is that as to each one of these bills which has been reported favorably the committee stands here ready to support and press it; but we propose to get those passed first which will not provoke debate and delay. I think that is a commonsense method of which the Senator from Colorado will approve. That course has been followed, and the last bill was the judicial bill; and when the Senator from New Jersey objected to that I stated that if there were much objection to it it would not be pressed, and the Senator, after the explanation of the Senator from Minnesota, withdrew his objection.

Now, the reason why this is not pressed this afternoon is because we are helpless. It is perfectly clear from what has occurred that we can not get it passed during the rest of the day.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose we can not?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Senators having indicated what they have, that they propose to debate this bill not only extensively and upon its merits, but upon collateral lines, involving a Delegate from Porto Rico, etc., it becomes a matter of practical common sense that we can not pass it this afternoon. But as to the obtaining of unanimous consent, I simply cite the RECORD.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill ought to be considered and it ought to be considered now, and the Senators who are opposed to it should have an opportunity to state their reasons now, and let the Senate and the country know for what reason 65,000 people shall not be represented in any way, shape, or manner at the capital of the nation by a representative nominated by them and elected under our popular system. We may get through, and we may not. If we do not get through, we will at least have part of the record made, and the country will understand why it is that we are holding off from representation of any kind or character sixty or seventy-five thousand American citizens, eight or ten thousand miles away from the capital. Every other Territory that we have upon the mainland of the United States is represented at the capital by a properly chosen Delegate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator can get Senators here who have indicated their purpose to discuss the bill to give satisfactory assurance that we can get through with the discussion to-day we will press the bill. Otherwise it is not right for the Senate to occupy its time——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield the floor?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, sir; I have not yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Ohio to withdraw the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. While I think he has the parliamentary right to make the motion, or a motion to adjourn, nevertheless there was this agreement, made not without some hesitation on the part of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber who understood that Alaskan bills should be considered to-day, and understood it to mean up to the time of adjournment. Hence Senators who probably otherwise would have been here have absented themselves. I think the proper construction of the agreement is that Alaskan bills were to be considered during the legislative day.

Under the conditions which I have stated I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that we keep up the uniform practice of the Senate and that in order that we may have no misunderstanding we resume the consideration of these bills.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I appreciate in the fullest sense all that the Senator from Maryland has said; but I want to repeat, in answer to it, and then I am going to agree with him, that I have always understood it to be a part of every unanimous-consent agreement to consider legislative business that it was subject, as I said a moment ago, to the right to go into executive session just as, necessarily, it must be subject to the right to adjourn or to take a recess.

Those are privileged motions, as I read them a while ago, placed in the order in which I gave them.

Mr. CULLOM. And subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. FORAKER. And subject to the right of appropriation bills, as the Senator from Illinois suggests to me. So I made the motion to go into executive session in perfect good faith, supposing I had a right to do it without anybody taking any exception to it. But if there is the slightest question in the mind of any Senator here as to my right to do it, or if he feels that I am taking advantage of a mere technical right in the face of an obligation to continue the consideration of this business, I will only too gladly withdraw it.

I want to say to the junior Senator from Colorado, who was speaking a moment ago, that I have not made this motion because I am opposed to this measure, for I am in favor of it. I want a Delegate from Porto Rico.

Mr. TELLER. Help us pass this bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I will; but I want to get a good ready to help you pass it.

Mr. TELLER. You are ready now.

Mr. FORAKER. I am ready to express myself about it, of course. But we had this other business, which I thought was of equal importance, and I thought this might go over until we could all be present to discuss it. I think it is important that 65,000 people should have a representative of some kind at the national capital, and I think it far more important that a million people should have such a representative. They had a representative, who is called a "resident commissioner," but I know how inconvenient it is to have a resident commissioner instead of a Delegate——

Mr. PATTERSON. Alaska has not even a resident commissioner.

Mr. FORAKER. By reason of the fact that when I, as chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, want to consult with him I can not see him on the floor of this Chamber I have to go out and hunt him up in the corridors, and stand around there and talk with him about public affairs and about the legislation they ought to have. It is a most inconvenient thing, and I do not see why they should not have a Delegate outright, the same as Hawaii has and the same as it is proposed Alaska shall have.

I wanted to say that much to show that my motion was not made to cut off the consideration of this subject, but only because I thought it was my right, and because I thought, from what the Senator from Connecticut said, that there was likely to be a protracted debate, and we would not have any executive session at all, perhaps, for the consideration of the business I have in charge in executive session.

Mr. TELLER. Have it to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of what has now been said, I withdraw the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business until later, when I will renew it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Until this day is ended.

Mr. FORAKER. Until we get through with the consideration, for this day, of this legislative business. I will want an executive session before we adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that it is not his duty to construe the meaning of a unanimous-consent agreement. It must be left to the Senators themselves. If a unanimous-consent agreement was reduced to the form of an order, then the presiding officer, without any hesitation, would rule whether or not a motion proposed to be made was in order. The bill will be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3339) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska; which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the committee amendments acted upon.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "hereafter,' to strike out "be entitled to;" so as to read:

That the people of the district of Alaska shall hereafter be represented by a Delegate in the House of Representatives of the United States, chosen in the manner and at the time hereinafter prescribed, and who shall be known as the Delegate from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 6, before the word "receive," to strike out "only;" so as to read:

That in lieu of the rate of mileage now allowed by law to Representatives and Delegates in Congress the Delegate from Alaska shall receive his actual traveling expenses from his home to the city of Seattle and return, and from the said city of Seattle to the city of Washington and return the same rate of mileage as is allowed by law to Representatives in Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move, on line 15, page 2, to amend by striking out "five" and inserting "seven;" so as to read "1907." It fixes the length of the term of the first Delegate; and it is apparent that if we leave it as it is in the bill, the first Delegate would have only a short term in Congress to serve and it would throw two expensive elections close together. If the amendment is adopted as I suggest, the first Delegate will serve a short fraction of a term and one whole term, and thus avoid two elections so close together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 15, after the word "and," strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the first election for Delegate from Alaska shall be held on the first Tuesday in August in the year 1904, and the Delegate then chosen shall hold his office for the term ending March 3, 1907, and that all subsequent elections for such Delegate shall be held on the first Tuesday in August in each year when there is a general election for Members of the House of Representatives, and the Delegate chosen at such subsequent elections shall hold his office for the same term as the said Members chosen at such general election.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 3, page 2, line 25, after the word "residents," to insert "in the precinct in which they vote," and on page 3, line 2, after the word "election," to strike out "in the precinct in which they vote;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That all male citizens of the United States 21 years of age and over who are actual and bona fide residents of Alaska, and who have been such residents continuously during the entire year immediately preceding the election, and who have been such residents in the precinct in which they vote continuously for sixty days next preceding the election, shall be qualified to vote for the election of a Delegate from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 3, line 11, after the word "That," to insert "each of;" in line 12, after the word "shall," to strike out "each, in the division to which he is assigned;" in line 16, after the word "precincts," to insert "in the division to which he is assigned;" on page 4, line 4, after the word "or," to strike out "typewritten" and insert "written;" and in line 7, after the word "places," to strike out "at the polling place;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That each of the judges of the United States district court in the district of Alaska shall at least thirty days before each and every election, upon his own motion or upon the petition of interested voters, by an order entered in the records of the court, establish the necessary election precincts in the division to which he is assigned, outside of the incorporated towns, define the boundary and designate the polling place of each precinct, and appoint three judges and two clerks in each precinct to have charge of and supervise the election, not more than two of the judges and one of the clerks to be of the same political party where practicable: Provided, however, That no such precinct shall be established with less than fifty qualified voters resident therein. That the precincts established as aforesaid shall remain as permanent precincts for all subsequent elections, unless discontinued or changed by the order of the district judge or by law; and each precinct shall be known by the name of the polling place in the precinct. That a printed or written copy of the order establishing an election precinct as aforesaid and specifying the day of the election shall be posted in three conspicuous and public places in the precinct at least fifteen days before the election.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments of the committee have been acted on.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into any extensive debate on this subject, but simply to make a brief, plain statement as to how the case of Alaska strikes me in this matter.

If a bill of this kind had been brought up for consideration in the last Congress, with the information I then possessed I should undoubtedly have opposed the bill. But, Mr. President, seeing is believing. I spent two months last summer in and around Alaska with a subcommittee. We were in no sense a junketing committee. We aimed in every instance throughout our trip to ascertain the conditions in that Territory and to ascertain the wishes and feelings of the people.

First of all, I want to say that the people of Alaska are not like the people in the Philippine Islands, or in the Hawaiian Islands, or in Porto Rico. The white people in Alaska are our own people, of our own kith and kin. We met on that trip just as bright, intelligent, orderly, and good citizens as you will find in any of the well-ordered communities of the older States. There were men there from all the older States. We found them from Maine, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, from all over New England and the Middle States, and the Middle West; and they were a sober, industrious, hard-working, thrifty lot of people.

Before I went up there I had expected to find that a good deal of Alaska was a sort of disorganized mob; that to a large extent the people in the mining camps and in the white settlements along the river were a kind of hobo, the scum of civilization. I found nothing of the kind. Whatever bad elements had come to that country in the early mining rushes had entirely been eliminated, and I found conditions prevailing throughout Alaska as orderly and as peaceful as anywhere in all this broad land. I did not go to a place in Alaska but that I would feel perfectly safe in going there by day or night, unarmed, and entirely alone.

Now, those people in Alaska have to a large extent been neglected by Congress. Their government, as I said a moment ago in discussing the judicial bill, is of an anomalous character. The people have been neglected. Their civil government, what little there is of it, is a government in the hands of three district judges and about forty-three court commissioners. Their whole government consists of that, and it is of such a limited character, compared with the great area of the country and the great variety of settlements and mining camps, it is surprising that even that little government can preserve law and order as they do in that country.

The government would be entirely defective if it were not for the fact that they are among the best of American citizens, citizens who believe in preserving law and order and maintaining good government there, although there are no legal provisions to cover a great many cases. For instance, outside of the incorporated towns—and there are only ten in Alaska—there is no system by which they can lay out a road; there is no system by which they can establish a school district; there is no system by which they can take an insane person and legally commit him to an insane asylum; there is no system by which they can provide for the destitute.

Now, in respect to Alaska, in the absence of a legislative Territorial government, those people stand before Congress and have the same rights for legislation and protection as the people here in the District of Columbia. They live at a great distance. They ought to have some one familiar with their conditions to represent their interests and their wants here.

Our committee spent eight months up there. We investigated conditions as far as we could; and yet, with the immensity of the region, although we traveled over 6,000 miles in and about that Territory, it seemed as though it was the mere outer shell of it that we got an opportunity to look into and examine.

That is a country of a great many more resources and possibilities than most of us imagine. Its agricultural resources are vast. Its mineral resources and its fishing industries are great and only demand development. The time will come, in my opinion, within the next fifty years, when Alaska will have over a million people. There are a great many sections of Alaska where I can not see why there is not as much show to make a permanent agricultural settlement and have a permanent population as in the northern part of Sweden and Norway, as in Russian Finland.

All those people think they ought to have some representative in Congress to voice their wishes. It was the universal feeling among all classes there that they ought to have a Delegate in Congress. When it came to the question whether the Delegate ought to be elected or appointed, the mass of the people—90 per cent of them—were in favor of an elective Delegate. They said any other than an elective Delegate is no Delegate at all. There were a few business interests, a few large mining companies, and a few other interests which were hostile to it, but outside of that the rank and file, the great body of the people of Alaska, want a representative in Congress.

Mr. President, since our committee returned from Alaska we have all of us spent a good deal of time in endeavoring to formulate and secure what little legislation we have passed or are attempting to pass here to-day. Nearly all of these bills have been prepared by members of that committee. We have given some study and consideration to the subject; but we are all loaded down and handicapped, as I know I have been, by the things which concern our own States. My State, Minnesota, is a young and growing State which requires a vast amount of local legislation; and I have felt, although I have given as much time as I could to Alaskan matters, that I had not time to give them all the consideration which they deserve.

If the people of Alaska are permitted to send a Delegate here to represent them in the Congress—a man who is familiar with the conditions there and who would know their wants—we would have a responsible representative to whom we could look to aid us and to guide us in formulating legislation. It is not every year that the Senate or the other House of Congress will be likely to consider these affairs. If a representative committee from either House of Congress could be sent up there every year to investigate and report upon the conditions it would be some help, but that is impossible; it can not be done. The next best thing is to give those people a Delegate who can come here and represent them and present the wants and needs of that country.

Mr. President, I shall now briefly refer to the details of the bill. I aimed in preparing the bill to be as careful and conservative as possible; but, of course, I had to be guided by the limitations of civil government prevailing in Alaska. First of all, the bill provides that the different incorporated towns, of which there are ten, shall each constitute an election precinct. Outside of incorporated towns the bill provides that the judges of the district court shall, after due consideration, establish and define election precincts and appoint the judges and clerks of election; and that where there are three judges of election and two clerks, wherever it is practicable, no more than two judges and one clerk shall be appointed from one political party. We have provided for a system of inexpensive returns. To avoid expense the returns are all to be made by mail. In order to avoid any mistake we have provided for two sets of returns—one to be made to the governor and one to the clerk of the court in the division in which the precinct is established. The governor and ex officio secretary of the Territory and one of the judges of the courts are to constitute the board to canvass the returns.

Mr. President, I shall not further weary the attention of the Senate, but will conclude by saying that we have aimed to make this bill as perfect and as good as we possibly could under the conditions prevailing in the Territory of Alaska. I trust that the Senate will afford the people of Alaska this poor privilege of electing and sending a Delegate to Congress.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the sixth section of this bill, providing for the administering of oaths to the judges and to the clerks. The bill provides that those oaths shall be administered or shall be taken in writing before an officer qualified to administer oaths. I should like to inquire if there are justices of the peace in that country, or whether the commissioners who are appointed by the courts are the only judicial officers to administer oaths?

Mr. NELSON. Those oaths can be taken either before the court, the clerk of the court, the deputy clerk, or the court commissioners, who are, in that country, ex officio justices of the peace, and who are also ex officio notaries public.

Mr. MALLORY. I submit, Mr. President, that there will probably be considerable difficulty in getting an officer authorized ordinarily to administer oaths to do so in these remote mining precincts. I suggest that these judges be permitted, as judges are permitted in most of the States, to administer the oath to each other and to the clerks. I have written out an amendment to that effect, which I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, section 6, line 11, after the word "writing," it is proposed to strike out "before an officer qualified to administer oaths;" and after the word "trust," in line 13, to insert:

And said judges are hereby authorized to administer said oaths to each other, respectively, and to the clerks.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I also call the attention of the Senator to line 3 on page 5, where the provision for depositing the ballots is found. The provision now reads:

Such ballots shall be folded by the voter so as not to disclose the vote, and by him handed to one of the judges of election, who shall immediately, in the presence of the judges—

I think it is customary in our State elections to have the ballot boxes exposed to the public, at least to the voter, and to allow the voter to see that his ballot is inserted in the box; at least I see no harm in permitting the voter to see that his ballot is properly deposited. I therefore suggest an amendment on page 5, section 7, before the words "the judges," in line 3, to insert the words "the voter;" so as to read:

In the presence of the voter, the judges, and the clerks.

In other words, to let the voter see that his ballot is put in the box while he is standing there.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment. It is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have one other amendment. In line 13, on page 5, section 8, after the word "make," I suggest that the following words be inserted: "before one of the judges of election;" so that it will read:

And when so challenged, before being allowed to vote, he shall make before one of the judges of election and subscribe to the following oath.

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, there is a verbal suggestion which I venture to make to the Senator in charge of the bill. On page 10, section 13, line 21, I suggest that the word "hereinbefore," after the word "crime," be stricken out, and that in lieu thereof there be inserted the words "by the provisions of this bill."

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. In the same section, in line 22, on the same page, after the word "acts," I move that the words "hereinbefore mentioned" be stricken out, and that there be inserted the words "made criminal by this bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To come in after section 13 and before section 14, so that of course it will be named section 14, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 14. That nothing in this act contained shall in any way be taken or construed to imply or indicate that the territory embraced in the district of Alaska, or any portion thereof, shall at any time hereafter be admitted as a State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PATTERSON. Before the amendment is agreed to—and I will agree to it—I simply want to have put in the RECORD the reason why I agree to it. It is not that Alaska shall not be admitted as a State or that it shall not be subdivided and admitted as several States if at any future time its population and development justify that action, but that a provision of this kind can in no wise bind the hands of any subsequent Congress. Whether it be in the bill, or out of the bill, Congress would have the power to admit the Territory as a State at any time or to admit it as several States or to keep it out as long as it pleases.

For that reason, so anxious am I to have the people of this great district properly represented, or as well as it can be represented under the conditions, so far as I am concerned, I will make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. May the amendment just offered be again stated, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, has that amendment yet been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May the amendment be read again, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have just heard the amendment read, Mr. President; and while I am not prepared at this moment to accept it, neither am I prepared at this moment to oppose it. I want to think about it a little while. As I understand, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has an amendment he desires to propose. Suppose we pass this amendment over and let the Senator from Ohio offer his amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut has rather a broad and far-reaching scope. Any technical amendment, any ordinary amendment, any amendment merely changing phraseology may be readily accepted or not accepted; but, as I have said, I want to think about this amendment for a little while.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if this amendment will satisfy the opponents of this bill, I shall be glad to agree to it. As I understand, the passage of this bill does not in the slightest degree pledge Congress or the American people that Alaska shall be a State. I am satisfied that when the time comes that the people of the United States believe it ought to be admitted, either as one State or as several States, it will be admitted, and it will not be admitted until that time. The fact that we give those people a government and a Delegate in Congress rather implies that they are not fitted to become a State at the present time, but it does not imply that we are at some day to admit them, and certainly not unless they possess the proper qualifications.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I entered the Senate just as the amendment was being read. Is it the Senator's amendment?

Mr. TELLER. No; it is the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is opposed to giving Alaska a Delegate, as I understand, for fear it would imply—he will speak for himself, as I understand—or be some sort of a pledge that we are going to make a State of this Territory.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to have the Senator from Connecticut state what is the effect of the amendment which he has offered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think I shall come to that as I go along. But first I want to make some observations on the rules of the Senate and the method of doing business in the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought I had the floor a moment ago to offer an amendment, and I made an inquiry——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to offer an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not want to amend the amendment, but I want to propose another amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (to Mr. FORAKER). Present the amendment and let it lie over.

Mr. FORAKER. I think both amendments might just as well be submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be received.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added as a new section before the section at present numbered 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 3, it is proposed to insert as new sections the following:

SEC. —. That the qualified voters of Porto Rico shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1904, and every two years thereafter, elect a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, whose term of office shall commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the date of his election. Such Delegate shall have a seat in the House of Representatives, with the right to debate, but not to vote, and shall be entitled to the same compensation for salary and other allowances and to the same rights and privileges as the Delegates from the Territories of the United States. No person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide citizen and voter of Porto Rico, who is not 25 years of age, and who does not read and write the English language.

SEC. —. That the Delegate herein provided for shall be elected in lieu of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States, provided for by section 39 of the act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900: Provided, That all the provisions of this act shall apply to the present Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States, whose term of office is hereby extended to the date of the expiration of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

SEC. —. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, before I come to the discussion of this bill, I want to submit some observations on the method of doing business in the Senate. I do so at the present time because I am just now smarting under what I conceive to be the injustice of those methods. I make no claim upon that ground to any delay of this bill, but it seems to me that the Senate of the United States ought to provide by its rules the method in which it will do business, and that the practice which has sprung up here of trying to do things by unanimous consent is in no way a substitute for rules which ought to be provided for the orderly transaction of the business of the Senate.

There never is a unanimous consent given here which does not bind some Senator in some way in which the Senator did not expect to be bound, and did not suppose he was bound. I have seen unanimous consent asked for and given when there were not ten Senators in the Senate; and because asked for and given under those circumstances, there was supposed to be some sort of an obligation upon the Senators not present, and who would not, perhaps, have given their assent if they had been present, that that unanimous consent should be kept to the letter, and the fraction of the letter, that "the pound of flesh" should be taken, and that nothing should by any means interfere with the carrying out of such a unanimous-consent agreement.

That is the case to-day. The Committee on Territories, at least many of the members of the Committee on Territories, have understood that I did not agree to the bill providing for the election of a Delegate from Alaska, and that whenever that matter should come before the Senate I should expect to be heard upon it. I did not suppose, as I stated in the early part of the day, and I had good reason not to suppose, that this bill would be pressed for passage at this time.

It is very remarkable, Mr. President, how these unanimous-consent agreements of ours work. If it were a bill of great importance—no, if it were the bill providing for the erection of a public building, which is now the unfinished business of the Senate, and there was any Senator in this Senate who said that he desired to be heard upon it, but that he was not ready at this time, by unanimous consent the Senate would let the matter go over until he was ready to discuss it.

More than that, if a Senator should rise in his place and say that another Senator, whom he knew wished to be heard in reference to the passage of a bill, was unavoidably absent, and he would ask that the matter might be temporarily postponed, or something of that sort, until that Senator could be present, there would be no objection on the part of any Senator in this Chamber. But when a Senator in my place understood, and had a right to understand, that this bill was not to be pressed to-day to its passage, and when other Senators understood that I was not ready to speak upon it, that I have not the documents to which I expected to refer, there is no sympathy to be shown to a Senator under such circumstances when a unanimous-consent agreement has been made which he did not understand to embrace the pressure of a bill such as this.

I do not think that I am making this statement because smarting, as I say I am, under the injustice of such a unanimous-consent agreement, but I think that I am justified in making it for the orderly transaction of the business of the Senate. I do not intend hereafter to give my assent to fixing a time for action upon any bill.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. Was the bill that is now under consideration included in the number of bills to be considered to-day?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Nominally and technically it is included, but by the understanding of Senators who were opposed to it it was not to be pressed for consideration to-day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And probably the Senator might add at this stage that when the unanimous-consent agreement was asked for the reason why it should be granted was that it was to apply to bills which undoubtedly would meet with no opposition in the Senate, and not only that, but the nature of the bills was specified, such as road bills, care of the insane, etc. Unanimous consent was asked for and given to consider Alaskan legislation, and it was stated as a reason—I hope I do not interfere with the Senator from Connecticut——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And it was stated as a reason why the consent should be given that it should apply to bills of pressing and immediate importance which would undoubtedly meet with no opposition in the Senate, and, further than that, the nature of the bills was specified, and it is so found in the RECORD. I think it is only fair to the Senator from Connecticut that that should be stated, because that is the case on the record.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not ask any personal consideration in this matter; I can take care of myself.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, of course the only question involved in this thing, to my mind, is whether we are not pressing for the consideration of this bill, which, in fact, was not included in the class of bills that were to be acted upon to-day with reference to Alaska.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Both Senators from Colorado had already stated, before the Senator came into the Chamber, that this was the bill in which they were most interested, and that they expected that this bill would be considered to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. I so understood.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And other Senators understood it so.

Mr. CULLOM. But if the majority of the committee announced that this was not the kind of a bill to be considered——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was not announced.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that takes it out of that rule, and that the Senate ought to regard what is the usual propriety in allowing the bill to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The courtesy of the Senate—I would rather not be interrupted——

Mr. CULLOM. I wanted to say that much anyway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The courtesy of the Senate is a mysterious, a fearful, and a wonderful thing; it is to be exercised on occasions, and on other occasions it is not to be exercised. I think that the experience of this day most certainly points to the necessity of having some rule in the Senate by which the Senate can do business in an orderly way and the rights of no Senator and the privileges of no Senator and the understandings of no Senator be invaded or infringed upon.

I do not think that a previous question pure and simple ought to be adopted in this Senate; but I do think there ought to be some rule whereby debate can be limited to a reasonable time, and a time fixed for the taking of a vote otherwise than by unanimous consent, obtained in a thin Senate, when perhaps not more than five or six Senators are here. I think every Senator has a right to know when a vote is to be taken.

I called attention to this matter at the commencement of this Congress. I introduced an amendment to the rules which should operate, when a matter had been under reasonable discussion, to fix a time for a vote upon it; not an arbitrary time——

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that there is no member of the Committee on Territories who desires to press this bill to a vote before the Senator from Connecticut has had the fullest opportunity to prepare himself to make remarks and to make his remarks, nor to prevent any other Senator from making remarks upon this bill. So I reiterate practically what I said before—an hour ago, perhaps, in this Chamber—that if we can only manage to have some arrangement made by which this bill will be considered definitely at some future time, we will be only too happy to agree that it may go over until that time, in order that every Senator who wishes to debate it may have the opportunity. But what we object to is that we, outside of the Senator with whom the Senator from Connecticut said he had some understanding, had no such understanding.

I have not been in the Senate very long, but I have been here long enough to know that unanimous consent as recorded is the rule by which the Senate is bound, and that when a Senator desires to have any exceptions made in the unanimous consent to its full and complete operation, that exception will be noted in the order.

Independently of that, I wish to repeat that if the Senator from Connecticut, who seems to be the chief opponent of this measure, for reasons that are satisfactory to him and, of course, for reasons which we are bound to respect though we may disagree with him, will simply undertake to make some arrangement by which the bill may be taken up again and not be practically indefinitely postponed, the members of the Committee on Territories will be only too glad to do so. A week or ten days from now will do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A motion to postpone to a day certain is always in order, but the Senator must not ask me to make any unanimous-consent agreements.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is likewise always in order for a Senator to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill. So the consideration of this bill can not be absolutely prevented if it goes over to-day. It will be in order to move its consideration at any time when a Senator can get the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to conclude what I have to say, if there is no objection.

At the executive session on March 18, 1903, I proposed to amend the rules, and submitted a resolution to that effect. I wish to read it now:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following:

"The Senate may, at any time when a bill, treaty, or other measure is under consideration, by a vote of three-fifths of the Senators present and acting, taken without debate, adopt an order fixing the time when debate upon such bill, treaty, or measure shall cease, and when a vote upon the same and all amendments pending or that may be then offered shall be taken without further debate; and in the order fixing the time for the taking of such vote may also limit the time which a Senator may occupy in debate between the adoption of such order and the final vote upon such bill, treaty, or measure."

Mr. President, I do not claim or insist that that is the only method by which the business of the Senate may be transacted reasonably, orderly, and with reference to the rights and privileges of each member of the Senate. I say in the amendment that three-fifths may limit debate and fix a time when a vote shall be taken, because I do not think it is fair that a bare majority should thus fix the time. But certainly I think that if three-fifths of the Senators present and acting consider that a bill has been properly debated, or that it will be properly debated within some time to be given it, and be thoroughly understood by the Senate, no harm can come to the minority of the Senate.

Now, what are rules for? They are for two purposes, I imagine. The one is for the transaction of business; to make it possible that a majority of the Senate shall be enabled to transact the business of the Senate. The other is that the rights of the minority in the Senate shall not be infringed. I do not think that the fixing of a time, when three-fifths of the Senate consider that that gives a reasonable time for debate, could be considered at all as an infringement of the rights of the minority.

The majority must be able to do business. It is the foundation stone on which our Government rests that the majority shall rule, and it applies equally as well to the Senate of the United States as it does to any other department of the Government or the Government itself. If three-fifths of the Senate can be permitted to vote only by the grace of the minority, then the power is taken out of the hands of the majority and is practically placed in the hands of the minority. That is not according to our system. It is not according to our idea.

Now, I am not going to take a great deal of time on this subject to-day; but I wish to call attention to the fact that we discuss matters at indefinite length here and in a dreary, half-hearted way, giving each Senator who wants to speak plenty of time in which to prepare his speech, extending the courtesy of the Senate to every individual member of the Senate who says that he wishes to discuss a matter, and so every important measure, every measure on which there is any real difference of opinion, drags along as the unfinished business from day to day, every once in a while the Senator in charge attempting to get a unanimous-consent agreement that a vote may be taken at a certain time.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] asks me to yield to him under circumstances under which I think it is proper to yield.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his courtesy. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on Ways and Means, of Mr. COCKRAN of New York.

DEATH OF HON. GEORGE W. CROFT.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the sad duty is mine to announce to this House the death of the Hon. GEORGE W. CROFT, a Representative from the State of South Carolina, who died this morning at 7.30 o'clock at his residence in this city. Of his worth, of his virtues I shall not speak now, but at some future time I shall ask the House to consider that matter in a suitable manner.

As a mark of respect to him, I offer the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina offers the following resolutions, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. G. W. CROFT, a Representative from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a committee of thirteen Members to attend the funeral services.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Member the House do now adjourn.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, and in view of the special order under which the House has been proceeding, having fixed 4 o'clock this afternoon for a vote, I think it proper to ask unanimous consent that the order heretofore fixed for to-day shall continue to another day. I had said that I would make the suggestion that it apply to-morrow until it was suggested that to-morrow being pension day the committee did not desire to be displaced. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the order applicable to to-day shall be available and continue until Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to suggest, I think the better idea would be to let Saturday be taken for pensions and the House execute the pending order to-morrow.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should prefer to let a representative of the Pension Committee state as to that.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the order applicable to-day shall be applicable to-morrow, and that Saturday be devoted to pensions under the rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the first two resolutions offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following committee: D. E. FINLEY, WYATT AIKEN, J. T. JOHNSON, GEORGE S. LEGARE, R. B. SCARBOROUGH, A. F. LEVER, HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, GEORGE R. PATTERSON, WILLIAM RICHARDSON, FRANK A. MCLAIN, HENRY A. HOUSTON, CHARLES H. WEISSE, AMOS H. JACKSON, and JOSEPH C. SIBLEY.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the third resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow at 12 m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

CHANGES IN RAILWAY TARIFF RATES.

Mr. ELKINS. I am instructed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] January 13, relative to changes in railway tariff rates, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its immediate consideration. It is a resolution calling for information.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to furnish the Senate, as speedily as may be practicable, a report showing the principal changes in railway tariff rates, whether resulting from the adoption of new rates or the amendment of freight classifications, and an estimate of the effect of such changes upon the revenues of railway corporations in the United States during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903, as compared with the revenue that would have been derived by them under the rates and freight classifications in force during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. And that said Commission also include in said report such estimate as may be practicable of the effect of such changes in rates and freight classifications upon the revenues of said railway corporations derived from the transportation of leading commodities, for example, iron and steel articles, coal, lumber, grain, flour, hay, and sugar, during the periods above mentioned.

The amendments of the Committee on Interstate Commerce were, in line 6, before the word "revenues," to insert the words "gross and net;" in line 10, before the word "revenue," to insert the words "gross and net;" and in line 13, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-nine," to strike out the remainder of the resolution and to insert "and also report the changes in cost of operation and maintenance of said railways for said years;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to furnish the Senate, as speedily as may be practicable, a report showing the principal changes in railway tariff rates, whether resulting from the adoption of new rates or the amendment of freight classifications, and an estimate of the effect of such changes upon the gross and net revenues of railway corporations in the United States during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903, as compared with the gross and net revenue that would have been derived by them under the rates and freight classifications in force during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899; and also report the changes in cost of operation and maintenance of said railways for said years.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator who reported the resolution. I have a very strong desire to have the information that is contemplated in it, but I should like to inquire as to the authority of the Senate over the Interstate Commerce Commission. The resolution, if I understand it, requires not merely the furnishing of copies of their records or archives, but requires them to give to the Senate their opinion as to the result of an important investigation. It may be a costly investigation, and of course I suppose in some mode there has been or will be provided the means for making the investigation.

I am entirely in favor of the purpose of the inquiry, but it seems to me very important for the dignity and authority of the Senate that we shall observe carefully the lines of our constitutional and lawful power.

I suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission is a tribunal by itself, not under any Department of the Government, not under the Department of the Interior, for instance. How is that?

Mr. ELKINS. It is an independent bureau. It is not in any Department at all.

Mr. HOAR. If it were a bureau of the Interior Department, of course we should address the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ELKINS. It is not in any Department.

Mr. HOAR. It is separate, as the Agricultural Commission was before the creation of a Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CULLOM. It is separate.

Mr. ELKINS. I will state for the information of the Senator from Massachusetts that this resolution has had the careful consideration of the committee, and that information was sought from the Commission as to the probable amount of work and the cost it would entail. We were informed that it would not be very great, owing to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the reports of all the railways made annually, and this is just asking for information from those reports.

Mr. HOAR. From their archives?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes. They have the information.

Mr. HOAR. I make no question about it.

Mr. CULLOM. And the resolution does not require any opinion, but merely a statement of the facts.

Mr. HOAR. I thought it inquired as to the probable cost of the changes.

Mr. CULLOM. That part of the resolution the committee struck out.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; that is the part stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ORDNANCE FOR PARK PURPOSES IN BOSTON.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directly by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4576) donating certain obsolete ordnance to the city of Boston, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill transferring the custody of certain obsolete ordnance to the city of Boston."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4051) to provide for the enlarging of the United States court building at Asheville, N. C., containing the United States court room, post-office, clerk's office, and internal-revenue offices, to report it favorably without amendment.

There is some urgency about this bill, it being a bill to make certain necessary additions to the building for the court-house, post-office, and internal-revenue offices located at Asheville, and I ask unanimous consent that it be put upon its passage.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the United States building at Asheville, N. C., which contains the United States court rooms, clerk's office, the post-office, and the internal-revenue offices, to be extended and enlarged so as to provide necessary and convenient accommodations for the courts, the post-office, and the internal-revenue offices, and provides that the total cost of extensions and enlargements shall not exceed $60,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. SIMMONS. What will be the effect of that?

Mr. ALLISON. It will have no effect whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill takes effect on its passage, of course.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CARMACK on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all documents and papers that have been filed in the Treasury Department in relation to the appointment of H. Smith Woolley, a former deputy internal-revenue collector of the district of Idaho, whose name is now before the Senate for confirmation as assayer in charge at Boise, Idaho.

Mr. CARMACK and Mr. HOAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that under the rule the debate on this matter ought to proceed in executive session.

Mr. CARMACK. I can not hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to suggest that under the rule the debate on the matter should proceed only in executive session.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to be heard on that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. HOAR. And it is the duty of the Chair to order the doors to be closed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I second the motion.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The doors will be closed.

At 12.30 p. m. the Senate, with closed doors, proceeded to consider the resolution.

On the question, Will the Senate agree to the resolution? it was determined in the negative.

The Senate, at 2 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m., proceeded to the consideration of executive business. At 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m. the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 12, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that this is his matter.

Mr. HAY. Very well; we can take it up to-morrow just as well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the regular order. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises for the purpose of making a privileged report—privileged under the rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the matter before the House, under the order of the House, perhaps without a special order, is a matter of the highest privilege, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana on the demand for the regular order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that ten days' general leave to print be accorded to Members.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Without further consideration, Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to object to that. I will think it over, and later may consent to it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I make the request clearly for the purpose of accommodating Members. I am pressed for time by Members, whom I would like very much to accommodate, but I have not the time to grant. If there could be any extension of time, in view of the demands, I have no objection to it. I thought that was a fair way to accommodate the Members of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that every Member of the House who is named in this report can rise to a question of personal privilege, and occupy as much time as he wants. Is not that the fact? If so, the debate should be extended sufficiently to allow Members who desire to speak on the proposition to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled on that question on a former case. This is a question of the highest privilege, and is entitled to consideration. Another question of privilege can not take this question from the floor of the House, or prevent the House from deciding this question when it desires to do so. The House has determined by special order when it will decide this question of privilege.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. As to what a Member may do later, after this question of privilege is disposed of, the Chair will rule when the question is presented, if it should be presented. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Chair has practically answered the inquiry I was about to make, which was that after a vote is taken, will it then be in order for a Member of the House mentioned in the report, who has not addressed himself to the matter referred to, to rise to a question of privilege and address the House on the matter relating to him in the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if a Member of the House rises hereafter to a question of privilege it is for the Chair to rule, subject always to the direction of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire under the present rule now in force at what time will the general debate close?

The SPEAKER. At twenty-five minutes past 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. OVERSTREET. A further inquiry: How will the remaining time be apportioned, in view of the time which has already been used?

The SPEAKER. Assuming that debate starts now, at ten minutes past 12, there are one hour and forty-nine minutes under the control of the gentleman from Indiana and two hours and thirty-six minutes under the control of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. OVERSTREET. In view of the demand for time from Members upon this side, more than I have time to yield, I ask unanimous consent that the order may continue until 4 o'clock on Monday instead of 4.25 to-day.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask that it be extended until 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask that general leave to print may be given to Members for ten days.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I said I felt compelled to object to that request, but, being put again, I will say why. I think as a general principle that whatever is said upon a matter of this sort ought to be stated in open House, or else it ought to be said before a special committee organized——

Several MEMBERS. Louder!

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order and gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is not so much the fault of the House as it is mine; I have been suffering from a very severe sore throat and can hardly talk loud enough. I think it would be well that whatever is to be said to the country about so delicate a subject as this should be said in open House [applause] or else it should be said before a committee of this House under the sanctity of an investigation, and be printed and go to the country through that course. I shall for the present object, and I am inclined to think that I shall persist in the objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. My purpose was entirely to afford accommodation to Members of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that, and I dislike to obstruct it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I now ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to occupy some of the time of which he has control.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, in view of some criticism that has been made upon the floor, of more criticism that has been made in the cloakroom and by Members in their seats, of the committee that drings this report to the House, I want to call the attention of the House to the circumstances under which they sent this resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ask them whether that committee could have done anything else than what they have done.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] on the 4th of January last presented to this House a resolution that was privileged—a resolution of the highest, highest privilege, It was stated in that resolution that certain charges had been made against the membership of this House. Had they been made? Why, sir, the facts are that there lay on the desk of every Member an official report from a great Department of the United States which contained those charges.

Was there any occasion to refer it to a committee to see whether the charges had been made? Why, sir, it had been published in a pamphlet sent out from the Post-Office Department that bore with it a letter of the President of the United States specifically approving that report and complimenting the gentleman that made those charges. Was there any occasion, then, to refer it to a committee to find out whether the charges had been made? Were those charges such as affected the membership of this House? The ruling of the Speaker on the question of privilege settled that, and no Member ever doubted that proposition or will deny it now. With this privileged resolution then in the hands of this House—a privileged resolution reciting charges affecting the character of Members, published in an official report, spread abroad by the Department with a letter from the President approving it, why did not the House act on it when the House had it in its hands? I will tell you why it did not. Here is the proof in the debate upon this very question when it first came before this body. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], who has spoken strongly in regard to this report, rose and asked the gentleman from Virginia why he did not first by resolution of inquiry find out who were the Members charged. Here is what he said:

> Now, let me ask the gentleman from Virginia if it would not be better to get the names of the people who must be in the mind of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, rather than make a general charge against the House of Representatives?

The gentleman from Virginia replies:

> I am not making a charge.

Then the gentleman from Michigan answers:

> Well, it is an insinuation—

That is what he thought then—> that the House ought to have this information before it acted on the resolution.

But he was not the only Member who took that position. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], one of the most experienced and ablest legislators in the House, and one of the recognized leaders of the majority, arose and said to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]:

> Here are serious insinuations, or call them what you like, and no names are given, as I understand. Ought not this House before it attempts a general sweeping investigation, inasmuch as the presumption is that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General knows the names of the men against whom he has made this allegation, call upon him to furnish the House with the names of the men he means to attack and the evidence upon which he bases it? Then the House could act intelligently.

And the gentleman goes on to say practically what he would do as chairman of that committee:

> Send for the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and say to him, "What do you mean? Where are they? Put your finger on them, and give us the names and tell us what they did."

That is what the distinguished gentleman from Ohio said should be done with this resolution—send it to a committee, that it may get from the Post-Office Department the names of the Members the Department intended to refer to in this charge and the evidence upon which the Department based those charges. Gentlemen, under those circumstances that resolution came to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Missouri has just said that the gentleman from Ohio in a speech here declared that the House ought to ask the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General to furnish the names of the persons whom he thought were guilty, and to supply the evidence. Your committee has done not only that, but you have brought in the names of 140 men against whom not a word of evidence affecting their character has appeared.

Mr. COWHERD. I am going to discuss that, if the gentleman will allow me to go on. I am not going to attempt to avoid anything. I am going to show the gentleman and the House that the committee has done only what in justice to the membership of this House it was compelled to do.

Now, then, when this resolution came before that committee it followed identically the suggestions that had been made.

Mr. SPALDING rose.

Mr. COWHERD. I can not yield. I have only fifteen minutes. Let me make my statement, and then let gentlemen interrogate me if they wish.

Mr. SPALDING. Allow me a single question.

Mr. COWHERD. Well, make it short.

Mr. SPALDING. Why did not your committee make some findings and a report instead of adopting the report of Mr. Bristow?

Mr. COWHERD. We did make a report, and I am going to read it, if you will allow me.

That committee first called upon the officer to ascertain whether he could give us this information. He first sent the evidence as to the violation of the law.

Remember, the "whereases" in this resolution charge practically four things, and I mention them in the order we took them up in committee, though not in the order they appear in the resolution itself:

First. A violation of law by Members in leasing their property to the Government.

Second. That at the request of Members leases had been canceled on post-offices and new leases made at increased rates.

Third. That Beavers had made allowances for increased clerk hire regardless of the merits of the case when requested by Members.

Fourth. Certain charges mentioned upon specific pages in the report. As the evidence in these cases is set out in the original Bristow report, they were never investigated by the committee.

Now, the first information that came was in regard to the three cases where leases had been made of property belonging to Members. Upon examination of those we found, as you have found, that if there was any violation of law it was of the most technical nature. Then we demanded whether they could furnish us a complete list of all allowances of increase of clerk hire upon request of Members that Beavers had made, with the evidence in regard to each case. They said they would have to examine the files in all cases where clerk hire had been allowed, and this would cover twelve or fifteen thousand cases; that they could not examine them all and report within any reasonable time; "But," they said,

"we have found 900 cases where allowances were made and discontinued because they were in violation of law." Then we said, "Give us that list," and that is what the letter of the chairman of the committee calls for. That list was furnished to us. I want to say to this House and the country——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say that he was informed by the Postmaster-General that he had a list of fifteen hundred cases.

Mr. COWHERD. No.

Mr. HEPBURN. A number of cases.

Mr. COWHERD. No; I said there were in all about 12,000 cases—they told us—where allowances were made for clerk hire and separating service; that they had found in the Bristow investigation about 900 cases where there was an improper allowance, and the Department had since discontinued these allowances.

Mr. HEPBURN. Nine hundred that were contrary to law, I understood the gentleman to say. Was that statement made?

Mr. COWHERD. I am going to explain that, if the gentleman will allow me to get to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. COWHERD. I did say they were contrary to law and they were in this way: There is affecting this question both a law and a regulation. Now, regulations in the postal service, where they have authority to make them, have the force of law. There is a law authorizing the Department to allow clerk hire at third and fourth class offices in case of unusual business, but there is no appropriation for it. The Department has, however, been accustomed to make such allowances out of the appropriation for separating service, though strictly speaking I believe that is in violation of the law. First, you have got a law but no appropriation; second, under the separating service you have got the regulation making allowances in proportion to number of pieces of mail handled. That was violated, but it is not a law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen will allow me to proceed, we got that list, and I say here and now, if we must answer whether the charge is true as alleged, that "if a Member of Congress requested an increase in clerk hire allowed a postmaster, Beavers usually complied regardless of the merits of the case," I say that charge is true; Beavers did usually comply regardless of the merits of the case. Are Beavers and the Department censurable for it? Yes. Are the Members of this House censurable for it? No. Let me explain. I have said there was a law providing for clerk hire in unusual cases of unusual business, like the case of a town with a few hundred inhabitants in winter, but many thousand in summer, because it is a summer resort; or a college town with a small number of inhabitants in summer and an increase of a thousand or two in winter. That is unusual business. The law says the postmaster can make an allowance for it, but we have not appropriated for it for a number of years.

Now, there is another case, the separating service. Many Members do not seem to understand that separating service is this: Here is a fourth-class post-office, A, on the railroad. Then there is a little star route that runs out from it that supplies the offices of B and C. The postmaster in that fourth-class post-office is paid according to the cancellation of stamps in his office, but every day in the year, and sometimes many times a day, he must separate from the mail he receives the mail for the offices B and C. He gets no compensation for that except what is allowed him for separating service. The Department had a regulation providing that the allowance for separating service should be based upon the average number of pieces of mail that the postmaster separated daily. You did not know what that regulation was, the postmaster at A did not know it. It was a secret regulation; nobody knew it but the Department, and when you, a Member of this House, received a letter from your postmaster at A. saying he was not receiving the separation fee allowed by law and that he had to pay out of his salary three hundred or four hundred dollars for clerk hire, how could you know whether it was true or not?

You took it to the Post-Office Department, as you had a right to do, and asked that that postmaster at A be made an allowance. You had a right to expect the regulations would be observed, but Beavers, instead of having the count made, as he ought to have done, in some instances, if you were a Member of sufficient importance, granted the request, regardless of the regulations. In other cases he had a count made, and when it showed that the separating fee should be a hundred dollars a year according to the regulations, he allowed you $500. Now, gentlemen, I say you are not to blame. In my humble judgment, and I do not set myself up as a judge of any man, there are a few cases where, after a count and ascertainment of what allowance would be proper, unusual allowances were made, and a request would follow shortly for an increase, and the increase would be granted, and in a few months another increase would be made. If there was nothing back of that but the separation service, as appears in this report, then it seems to me the Member was making unusual requests upon the Department, and the propriety of his conduct is a question between him and his constituency. It is not a violation of law, and therefore not a question for you to handle, as I understand it, and therefore, while reporting the facts as given by the Department, we do not believe there is anything in those facts calling for an investigation of the conduct of Members.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes further.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, gentlemen, that is the answer to one charge, which answer came to us with the approval of the Post-Office Department. But the gentleman says, why did we not make a report? We did. We say:

> In the matter of increased allowances to the postmasters out of the fund referred to, the recommendations of Members appear clearly to have been in harmony with the long-established custom of referring to the Department applications from postmasters seeking increased accommodations.

And we quote with approval the statement of Mr. Bristow, as found at page 145 of his report:

> The executive officer is expected to do his duty in accordance with the law and the practice of the Department. Congressmen, as a rule, want their constituents to have what they are justly entitled to and no more. It is true that there are occasional exceptions to this rule, but happily such exceptions are few. But whatever may be the request of the Congressman, the executive officer has a plain duty which the Member of Congress expects him to perform.

Were we to edit this report? Were we to take out the case where a Member got only $50 more than the regulation required and leave in the case where a Member got a thousand dollars more? The names of many of this committee appear in that report. Suppose they had been edited out or their friend had been edited out and your name or your friend's had been left in? You would have lashed this committee off the floor of the House. You would have demanded our authority to edit an official report from a Department.

Now comes the question of increases of rent. We asked only exactly what the resolution called for, and that was in the letter of the chairman of the committee, cases where leases had been canceled and renewed at higher rates.

They sent, in response to that, this report, with some twelve or fifteen cases of that kind and with more than a hundred cases that were not called for. That report came to the Post-Office Committee. Some of those cases not called for were cases, however, where the rent had been increased upon request of a Member, sometimes doubled, and immediately a ten-year lease made with the three-months clause eliminated. Ought we to have edited that report? What man on the floor of this House would have permitted that committee to take an official report from that great Department and say what part of it reflecting on Members we would publish and what part of it we should not?

Mr. BURLESON. Why did you not send it back to them and make them expunge that which you had not asked for?

Mr. COWHERD. If we had sent it back to be expunged or edited this committee and this House would have been pilloried before the country as attempting to procure changes made in a report reflecting on the Members.

Mr. BURLESON. You asked for specific information. The Department gave you information that you had not asked for concerning a hundred Members whose cases, as you state, were not embraced within your question, and then your committee brought the document containing this information before this House. I say it is an outrage.

Mr. COWHERD. I say that the committee could do nothing else than present it to the House as the Department sent it. [Applause.] Every man here knows that the fact of this report having been made had been published in the newspapers; every correspondent in Washington was besieging the doors of that committee demanding an inspection of that report. The great newspapers had published column upon column in commenting on the matter and speculating upon the nature of the report, so that it was due to the membership of this House and due to the committee that the facts be given. [Applause.] I say here and now that the membership of this House—I mean as to more than nine-tenths of you—that you have done nothing wrong, and you will take that volume back to your constituency and say, "Here is the proof that I was endeavoring to get what was due my constituents and only what was due them," and your people will stand behind you and will approve your conduct.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. COWHERD. I have only a very limited time.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri who edited this report? I have personally examined the files of the Post-Office Department in the case of the Stratford, Conn., post-office, where the influence is attributed to "White House." The files do not show the words "White House" at all; but in a memorandum the name "W. House" is written. Who had the right to assume that this meant White House, and that the beloved McKinley should thus be slurred by innuendo?

Mr. COWHERD. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads never added a word or took away a word from that report.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Somebody has made the change.

Mr. COWHERD. If it was done at all it was done by the Department. [Loud applause.] The committee never made a change. [Renewed applause.] Now, what do you gentlemen say? You come here and say that that Department has lied about you. You say that that Department has published a malicious slander against the membership of this House. You say that that great Department did it on purpose and with malice aforethought, and then you say to the membership of this House, we will appoint a committee to investigate you who have been so cruelly slandered, but when it comes to an investigation of that Department that issued the slander it must be done by itself. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Are you going to say to the country that the Department that lied about you tells the truth about its own misdemeanors? [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Did you not approve with uproarious applause the following statements as they fell from the lips of the distinguished Republican leader from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]?

Mr. Speaker, what is this paper here for? What does that document mean; what was its purpose? Has the country wrongly construed the presence of this infamous document in this House? Has this House, with the serious faces that I see about me, misunderstood the purpose and purport of that document? Is this a little, trifling matter thrown in here by the understanding of somebody who does not know any better? Or is it a designedly willful and malicious libel upon 191 Members of the House and Senate?

And again, when at the conclusion of his remarks, he said:

I quit where I began. I say that the purpose and intent of that document can have no other effect. It was born for that purpose. "It was conceived in sin and born in iniquity," and it has traveled its guilty course until it has struck the public of the United States as a great attack upon a body of men which I believe in all sincerity as free from wrongdoing, corruption, crime, or irregularity of conduct as any equal number of men on the face of the earth. [Loud applause.]

The loud applause the stenographer has noted came as much from your side of the Chamber as from ours.

Now, you propose to say to the country the Department which published that document about you is the purest and the best on earth, and more capable than even yourselves of examining into its own iniquities? [Loud applause.] And yet that is the position you are prepared to take before the country.

Gentlemen, I am a partisan and a party man. I recognize party fealty as not only the right but the duty of a Member of Congress, but when the honor of the membership of this House, when the honor and the welfare of the people of the United States, aye, and of an honest and honorable management of a great Department of this country is involved, it is above all demands of partisanship or party fealty. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The American people are not an hysterical people. You need not be afraid that the American people will censure any Member of this Congress for going to the Department and demanding his rights and the rights of his constituents. The American press is not a press of yellow journalism. In the first blush and heat of this discussion, before the facts were published, some great newspapers, without knowing all the facts, may have had editorials reflecting improperly upon honorable men. But when they have had an opportunity to examine the facts, they will exonerate and exculpate every man that only did his duty, and any man that did what he ought not to have done ought not to be exculpated; but I submit to you, gentlemen of the majority of this House, the American people are going to demand at your hands an honest, a thorough, and an efficient examination into the affairs of that Department that you have published to the country as being guilty of perpetrating a malicious slander upon your membership. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, can it hurt you or the Department? I say here and now that the sunlight of publicity never has hurt an honest man or an honest department. [Applause.] If in dark and noisome places there is an unwholesome and unhealthy growth, the sunlight of publicity will kill it. If it is an honest and wholesome growth, that sunlight will only make it blossom into a better fruition for the service of the people of this country. [Applause.] Let me say in conclusion there is but one path you can tread with honor to this House and justice to the country, and that is a full examination of the entire postal affairs, both as to the Department and as to the membership of the House. [Great and continued applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ] ten minutes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Speaker, disdaining any apology for anything that I have done, secure in the confidence of my own people, conscious that I have acted absolutely within my right and my duties as a Representative in Congress, I should allow this remarkable report to pass without notice so far as it refers to me personally——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we may have order.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may be indulged for a moment. Debate closes at 4.25, and the time has been divided between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Tennessee, and all the time that is consumed in preserving order reduces the time of those who are entitled to speak in that time. The Chair, therefore, trusts that the House will preserve order the balance of the day without being admonished by the Chair.

Mr. KLUTTZ (continuing). And I should have nothing to say except for the fact that the names of honorable gentlemen who are not Members of this House, some living and some dead, have been lugged into this report in connection with my own, and I feel that it is my duty, as they have no standing in this forum, to say a few words in explanation of their connection with this report. This, Mr. Speaker, is a most remarkable report, and I am glad to learn that it was not prepared by Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow, although it came to us over his sign manual. If he had prepared it, I am sure it would not be the miserable, mischievous melange it is. It is divided into three parts, and the first part, as the gentleman from Missouri has well said, is, in some measure at least, responsive to the letter addressed to the Post-Office Department by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; and we have here thirteen tabulated pages of names of Members of this House, with a few Senators lugged in, including some who have passed out and some who are dead, who are arraigned here—for what? For a violation of any law? No; but for violation, as is alleged, of a secret regulation of the Post-Office Department, which was not known and could not have been known to the Members named in this report, who made these requests for additional clerical assistance for third and fourth class postmasters.

Has it come to this, Mr. Speaker, that a Department of this Government, a creature of this Congress, can rise above its creator and provide secret regulations, and thus determine in what manner a Member of Congress shall approach it, and then hold him up to public scorn and ridicule because, unwittingly, he has violated that secret and unknown regulation of the Department? It was a Roman tyrant, I believe, who wrote his laws in illegible characters and placed them so high above the roadside that his subjects could not read them, and then held them to a strict account for the minutest violation of those unknown laws; and that, Mr. Speaker, is the only parallel that I can find to this remarkable regulation of this Department. Lugged into this report is the name of the Hon J. C. Pritchard, an honorable and upright gentleman from my State, who was honored by his constituency as a Republican with a seat in the Senate of the United States, who now, by appointment of President McKinley, holds a place upon the bench of this District, and who, by his able, impartial, and upright bearing in the trial of Machen and others, has wrung compliments not only from Congress and from the press, but from the defendants themselves.

He is no longer a member of the Senate, and he is pilloried here, upon an inquiry confined to Members of this House, as having joined me in a recommendation for an increase of clerk hire for an overworked third-class postmaster at Lexington, in my district, and for making recommendations in several other similar instances. Why should this gentleman have been lugged into this report? Does some subordinate placeling of the Post-Office Department (for this report is said to have been prepared by subordinates), with the fear of the penitentiary hanging over him, and seeing himself walking in the footsteps of Machen, desire in advance to prejudice before this House and before the country the honorable and upright judge before whom his case may be brought to trial? I would not charge that, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that it is the only reasonable explanation of this outrage upon an honorable and upright judge. And then the name of my former Republican colleague, the Hon. James M. Moody, who now sleeps the sleep that knows no waking, is lugged into this report because, forsooth, he had recommended a little excess allowance of about $20 for a post-office in his district, the only single instance in which he is mentioned in this report.

Mr. Speaker, the hyena alone of all the animals disturbs and devours the physical remains of the dead, and is held in detestation above all the animal kingdom. [Applause.] More detestable, Mr. Speaker, is the hyena in human form, who would tear aside the cerements of the grave and seek to besmirch and deflower the fair reputation of the honored dead. [Applause.]

Brave, honorable, manly Jim Moody, the fair fame you left to your wife and children as a precious heritage shall not thus be besmirched without my indignant protest. [Applause.]

The third part of this report, Mr. Speaker, I say is utterly gratuitous and irresponsive to the inquiry of the chairman of the Post-Office Committee as directed to the Post-Office Department. Let me read:

On the 23d of January, 1904, Mr. OVERSTREET, chairman of the Post-Office Committee, addressed a letter to the Post-Office Department, as follows:

"SIR: I have the honor to request that there be furnished direct to this committee by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General all information which can be communicated by such official with reference to allowances for clerk hire in offices where these allowances have been discontinued—together with all information relating to leases which have been made to Members of Congress, and whether discontinued and renewed at a higher rate."

Now, listen—

The inquiry was as to leases that had been made to Members of Congress and to no other. And then on the 25th day of January an additional letter was directed by the chairman to the Postmaster-General, in which he asked—for all cases where leases of post-office premises have been canceled and renewed at a higher rate, together with a statement in detail, giving a full explanation of the facts connected with each case.

So he asked in the first letter for leases made to Members of Congress, and in the second letter for leases which had been canceled and renewed at a higher rate. I say that almost every case which has been put in this report and which is before the country does not come under either one of these inquiries, and that Members of the House, living and dead, have been dragged before the country not for making leases while Members of Congress, not for having these leases canceled and increased, but because, forsooth, as representatives of the people they have dared to go to this high and mighty Department and recommend that postal rents be increased in cases within their own personal knowledge and affecting their immediate constituents. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, during my service in Congress I have had the honor and the pleasure of going to every Department in this Government—the Treasury, State, the War, the Judicial, the Naval, the Agricultural, the Interior—and even to my august namesake in the White House, and in every case I have been treated with that courtesy and with that consideration which I believe is due to the Members of this body, and it now remains for the Post-Office Department to set itself up above Congress and to malign—if I may use the word, although, perhaps, it is too strong—to hold up to the country Members of Congress, simply because they have gone to that Department with the requests of their constituents, as they have done to every other Department of this Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina five minutes more.

Mr. KLUTTZ. And in that time, Mr. Speaker. I want to call attention briefly to the outrage which has been done my honorable friend the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], in lugging his name into this report and in lugging in again the name of ex-Senator, now Judge, Pritchard in connection therewith.

In July, 1899, Mr. OVERMAN, then a private citizen, leased a post-office building to the Government. In January, 1903, nearly four years afterwards, he was elected to the United States Senate, taking his place there in March, 1903. After his election as Senator he went to the Post-Office Department and tendered back his lease and asked them to take it off his hands, because he did not want to appear even to technically violate the law. The Department refused to release him and said it was not in violation of law and that they wanted the lease continued. And yet because I recommended the lease, because Mr. OVERMAN happens now to be Senator, I am pilloried before the country and so is he, and so is Senator Pritchard, who joined with me in recommending that lease.

Mr. Speaker, the suppressio veri is just as bad as the suggestio falsi. The impression is sought to be created here that the lease was made by Beavers as a personal favor to me and not because of the report of the inspector, which was filed four days before my letter was written, and which Mr. OVERMAN, with some trouble, has secured from the Post-Office Department. The inspector's report is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1904.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN, United States Senate.

SIR: In response to your personal request, I beg to transmit herewith a synopsis of a report made by a post-office inspector under date of July 30, 1899, on which the present lease covering post-office premises at Salisbury, N. C., was made, namely:

Advertised for proposals by posting notice in lobby. Received three; one from Mr. Edwin Shaver, at $1,200; one from W. F. Snyder, agent for building then occupied, at $740, and one from LEE OVERMAN. "The latter proposes to erect a building suitable for post-office purposes with all modern improvements, furnish complete equipment, heat, light, and a fire and burglar proof safe, at an annual rental of $700." The inspectors are strongly of the opinion that the proposition of Mr. LEE OVERMAN is the best and recommended acceptance and that he be directed to begin at once the erection of the building proposed "with the understanding that a lease for five years will be executed for said building on its completion."

Very respectfully,
R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. KLUTTZ. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. At that time Mr. OVERMAN was not a Senator, and you had no interest in the property then or thereafter?

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. OVERMAN was not then a Senator, and I had no interest in the property then nor thereafter, have no interest in it now, and never expect to have any. Again, in the same report—and I shall ask leave to publish all the correspondence in the RECORD—Mr. OVERMAN, finding that after the establishment of the city delivery and the rural free-delivery routes, and the consequent increase of expenses in water, heat, and light, he was losing money, wrote me a letter, which is published, and which I laid before the Department, and an additional allowance of $150 was made from January 1, 1903. That is published here, without giving—and here again is a suppressio veri, worse than a suggestio falsi—without giving what Mr. OVERMAN at some trouble has procured from the Department, this fact, that on December 11, 1903, an inspector investigated and found as follows:

The inspector, December 11, 1903, investigated the question of cost of heat and found that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, it cost for light $223, for heat about $100, and for water $10, and that much of this increase is brought about by increase of work at the post-office not anticipated by the lessor. The inspector concludes that, deducting cost of repairs, additional furniture, and interest on the cost of equipment (not less than $1,400), the lessor does not net more than $475 on the building, which he could rent without equipment, heat, light, or water at $600 per annum at least, according to prices prevailing in that locality. The inspector further says that the office needs a large safe very badly, and recommends that lessor be required to furnish same at once, and that if he fails to do so steps be taken to reduce the payment of rental to $725 per annum, the legal increase, as shown by the lease entered into between the lessor and the Government.

This shows that every statement in Mr. OVERMAN'S letter asking for the increase is more than confirmed, and that the Government was then, and is now, occupying his building at a rental of $150 less per annum than its actual rental value. And because Senator OVERMAN made this request, not as a matter of law, but as a matter of fairness and good conscience on the part of this Government, and because I recommended his application to be allowed this additional amount which the inspector says in substance he was entitled to, he has been brought into this report, and for no other ground and upon no other excuse. Is it not an outrage? [Loud applause.] Mr. Speaker, let us investigate these charges and this Department; let every Member of the House insist upon it by vote and by voice. I believe that the many honest officials and subordinates of the Department will welcome it, and that the country demands it. [Renewed applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to incorporate these various papers from the report in my remarks to be published in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The papers are as follows:

SALISBURY, N. C.

The post-office at Salisbury, N. C., was advanced to the second class July 1, 1899. The allowances on that date were $430 for rent and $60 for fuel and light. An inspector was detailed to make an investigation with a view to securing suitable quarters for the post-office under lease, and submitted three proposals, recommending the acceptance of a proposition from Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN for a five-year lease from January 1, 1900, at $700 per annum, including heat, light, and equipment. Mr. OVERMAN subsequently advised the Department that if he was to furnish water and pay water rent he desired to increase his bid to $725, and his proposition was accepted at that rate. Prior to its acceptance, however, the following letter was placed on file:

SALISBURY, N. C., July 25, 1899.

The FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The transition of my home post-office at Salisbury from third to second class necessitates new and better office quarters, and a number of bids have been made for furnishing suitable places. Of all these, I respectfully suggest that offered by Mr. L. S. OVERMAN is best, as the location is within required limits, convenient to the public on the principal street, near the court-house, and if it is accepted Mr. OVERMAN will erect at once a handsome granite-front building and fit it entirely new, so that our rapidly growing town will have a creditable office. Even if his bid should not be lowest, I trust it will be accepted.

Very respectfully,
THEO. F. KLUTTZ,
Seventh District, North Carolina.

I cheerfully concur in the foregoing recommendation.
J. C. PRITCHARD.

The reply thereto was as follows:

[Acceptance of proposition to lease premises for post-office, Salisbury, N. C.]

JULY 27, 1899.

DEAR SIR: Replying to a letter of the 24th instant, signed by yourself and Senator Pritchard, in behalf of the acceptance of proposition submitted by Mr. L. S. OVERMAN for the leasing of his premises for post-office purposes, etc., I beg to state that the Department has this day accepted Mr. OVERMAN'S proposition, and the postmaster has been instructed to notify him accordingly.

Very respectfully,
_____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. THEO. F. KLUTTZ, Salisbury, N. C.

The following memorandum appears in the files of the case:
"$150 fuel and light additional promised Cong. KLUTTZ, R. F. D. G. W. B."
The correspondence concerning this increase follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 17, 1902.

Hon. GEORGE W. BEAVERS,
Chief Division of Salaries and Allowances, Washington.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of this morning, I beg to recommend that allowance for post-office building, light, heat, etc., at Salisbury, N. C., be increased $150 per annum, effective from January 1, 1903. The attached letter from the lessor, Hon. L. S. Overman, contains in full the just grounds upon which the increase is asked.

Very respectfully,
THEO. F. KLUTTZ,
Member of Congress, Seventh District, North Carolina.

OVERMAN & GREGORY, ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Salisbury, N. C., December 10, 1902.

Hon. THEODORE F. KLUTTZ,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Some two years ago, as you know, I leased to the Government a part of my building for the post-office, at an annual rental of $725, I to furnish fuel, lights, and all necessary furniture. I have kept my contract to the letter, and expect to do so; but at the time I made my bid I estimated the lights not to cost me more than $85 per year, fuel not exceeding $40, and water $25, which would net me the same rent as I am getting for a smaller store in the same building. Since that time the town has grown very rapidly, post-office receipts have increased greatly, the rural routes have been established, also free-delivery for the town, and there has been added additional clerks and a night clerk, making the expense on me more than double. The light bill quadrupled, and the fuel bill will be at least doubled as it has been heretofore. I attach two bills for lights for the last two months, one for $25.75 and one for $21.60, and you take in consideration the great increase, and increase in fuel, the rent of my building will not net me more than $450. This great increase in expense was not anticipated when the contract was made with the Government. But I am satisfied when this matter is represented to the Department that they will make me an additional amount for lights and fuel.

Prior to the establishment of the free delivery and the addition of the night clerk there was no need for lights at the post-office later than 10 o'clock. I would be glad if you will take this matter up with the Department and get me an additional allowance of such a sum that would be just and reasonable for this additional heavy expense. You know I can rent this room now for $700 without furnishing lights, fuel, or water. Buildings adjoining are renting for from $750 to $800. I beg you to say to the head of Department having this matter in charge that I expect to carry out my contract, but I appeal to them only to make this allowance as a matter of fairness rather than a matter of right, as I am satisfied the Government would desire to give me a fair and just compensation for this room in the way of rent.

Yours, truly,
LEE S. OVERMAN.

DECEMBER 17, 1902.

Hon. T. F. KLUTTZ,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to your personal recommendation to-day in regard to increasing the rental for the post-office at Salisbury, N. C., owing to the increased cost for heat and light caused by the introduction of rural free-delivery service at that office, I beg to state that it has been decided to allow the lessor $150 per annum additional, commencing January 1, 1903, making the total rental $875 per annum for said premises.

Trusting this will be satisfactory, I am, very respectfully,

———— ————,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

DECEMBER 17, 1902.

Hon. H. A. CASTLE,
Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

SIR: Owing to the increased expense for heating and lighting the post-office premises at Salisbury, N. C., caused by the recent establishment of rural free-delivery service at that office, it has been decided to increase the rental in the sum of $150 per annum, effective January 1, 1903, making the total allowance for rent, fuel, and light $875 per annum. The lease on file in your office for post-office premises at Salisbury will not be changed.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The owner of the premises was elected a United States Senator, and took his seat March 4, 1903, and subsequently offered to surrender the lease, but the offer was declined, the lease not being invalidated by his election as Senator.

On January 26 the special allowance of $150 for increased cost of fuel and light from January 1, 1903, was discontinued to take effect January 1, 1904, the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department having rendered an opinion that there was no legal authority for allowing a sum in excess of the amount named in a lease for rental of post-office premises.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is provided by statute that—

The Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail routes as distributing or separating offices, and where any such office is of the third or fourth * * * class he may make a reasonable allowance to the postmaster for the necessary cost of clerical services arising from such duties.

Following the language of appropriation bills in recent years, the current appropriation bill provides—

For separating mail at third and fourth class post-offices, $1,300,000.

It will thus be observed that neither the general law nor the existing appropriation bill has put any limitation upon the discretion of the Postmaster-General as to allowances for the separating of mails except that they must not exceed the gross amount appropriated.

It is reported by this committee on the Hay resolution that for a long time a secret schedule has existed in the Post-Office Department under and by which it is determined how much shall be allowed each post-office for separating purposes. It is stated by the committee in its report that the regulation on this subject—is one which has obtained for a number of years and has never been made public, for the obvious reason that it might lead to abuse in instances where postmasters might unfairly secure a larger number of pieces to be sent through the mail at the time of the test than would ordinarily pass through without such action upon their part.

It is true that this schedule is kept secret, as stated in this report; but I deny that this secrecy tends to protect the Government against fraud. The law itself provides that the compensation shall be allowed upon the separation of mail, and where application is made for an allowance for this purpose, in every instance a requisition is made or ought to be made upon the postmaster for a report of the mail separated by him in order that the Department may determine whether he ought to have an allowance or increase of clerk hire.

It is a matter of public law that the clerk hire allowed shall be based upon the amount of mail matter separated, and the postmaster knows the amount allowed will depend on the amount of separation done in his office, and that the more he reports separated the more he will get; but he does not know at what rate he will be compensated, because the schedule upon which the amount allowed him is fixed is a matter of secrecy. This rule does not tend to protect the Government from fraud, but tends directly to protect fraud in the Post-Office Department. Just so long as this schedule is kept secret every man occupying the place that Mr. Beavers occupied can say to one man, "You are getting all the clerk hire to which you are entitled under the secret regulations of the Department," while he can say to another man who has reported exactly the same amount of separation, "You are entitled to a greater amount as compensation for separating in your office."

Thus it will be seen that this system is well calculated to aid a man like Beavers in perpetrating fraud in the Department, but has no tendency whatever to protect the Government from fraud. I protest, therefore, against the existence of such a secret regulation at all. It may be of some use to preserve secrecy in the Navy Department as to some matters, in the War Department as to some, and in the State Department as to others; but when money is appropriated by Congress for clerk hire, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, I deny his right, I deny the right of any subordinate in that office to say: "We have adopted a secret schedule which governs, controls, and binds the exercise of this discretion, and we will not reveal that to the people whose money we are spending, to the Congress that voted it, or to the postmasters for whose benefit it was appropriated."

That being the case, we are informed by this Department that unless the Congressman has some mysterious power that will enable him to discover what this secret regulation of the Department is, and if he, being unable to find out what it is, recommends an allowance for clerk hire in excess of that prescribed by this secret regulation, he is to be pilloried before the country, and his name is to be sent to a committee of Congress, to be heralded through the newspapers as engaged in the Post-Office graft. [Applause.]

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that this regulation has no place in the Post-Office Department; that if it exists at all it ought to be made as public as possible, in order that postmasters and Congressmen may know what their rights are; and I protest against this means by which the impression has been given to the country that Congressmen have been seeking to obtain irregular allowances for the postmasters of their districts, when Congressmen, postmasters, and people have alike been kept in ignorance by the Post-Office Department of what such postmasters were entitled to, and Congressmen were compelled to make recommendations without any information upon the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Most certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not true that the Bristow report, to which the gentleman now refers, specifically exonerates Members of Congress for what they did in that connection?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think it can not be said to do so, when it is sent to Congress in response to an inquiry such as was made, based upon his former report as to turpitude on the part of Members of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On page 146 of Mr. Bristow's report he says:

I do not offer any criticism against the Congressman. He did what Members of Congress usually do in representing the interests of their constituents before the Department, and had a right to expect the executive officer would do his duty in accordance with the interests of the public service.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the report of Mr. Bristow, as transmitted to the Post-Office Committee of this House, contain the information that is contained in the report of the committee to this House, that the Post-Office Department refused to let Members of Congress know upon what schedule they were distributing the money voted by Congress for that purpose?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Bristow submitted a specific report to this committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And failed to inform this committee of the fact that if any recommendation had been made by a Congressman in excess of the schedule fixed by the Department it had been done not only in ignorance of the schedule, but that the Department had seen fit to be so presumptuous as to conceal from Congress the schedule under which it was distributing the funds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the trouble is that Mr. Bristow took to his bed on the 25th day of January, immediately after submitting his first proposition to your committee, and has been confined to his room ever since.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have not said one unkind word about Mr. Bristow. I do not know, therefore, why the gentleman rushes to his defense. I do not know who originated this secret scheme. I simply say that this secret schedule ought to be made public; that we have a right to know where the money that we vote is expended, and on what basis it is expended, and when we vote that money to be expended under the discretion of a particular department, that department has no right to adopt secret schedules which govern and control the exercise of that discretion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I have any time remaining I yield it back to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments. As my name appears in the report on the Hay resolution, I desire to state the facts concerning the cases cited in my Congressional district.

I have the honor to represent a district that has been growing from year to year, and since my first term in Congress the postal matter handled in the district has increased nearly 100 per cent. This has from time to time necessitated changes, increase of salaries, enlarged quarters, and additional clerk hire.

I have made it a practice, when called upon by postmasters in my district who believed that they were not receiving a proper allowance for clerk hire or for rent, fuel, and lights, to forward such requests to the Department and to ask that the proper investigations be made, and then, if in accordance with the rules and regulations, to grant the desired increases, believing that if just and proper allowances were made it would tend to increase the efficiency of the service and result to the benefit of the patrons of the offices.

In the three cases mentioned—Viroqua, Mineral Point, and Mauston—the postmasters paid for rent a small amount per annum more than they received as an allowance, and as a result of the investigations of the Department they were allowed the full amount expended by them for this item.

My recommendations for increased clerk hire on account of mail matter separted for offices on star-route lines in the cases of Boaz, Mauston, and Boscobel were based upon statements of the postmasters that they believed themselves entitled to larger allowances, and such proved to be the case after the investigations by the Department.

At New Lisbon an unusual and extraordinary condition existed, placing upon the postmaster unusual burdens and responsibilities, he being required to employ an extra clerk in addition to the day clerk, to remain in the office all night to receive and dispatch a daily average of about 50 registered packages and 150 other packages which came in on the midnight train of the Valley division of the St. Paul road. I give below full information and details of each of the cases mentioned:

NEW LISBON POST-OFFICE.

Report shows: Clerk-hire allowance, former, $670; present, nothing.

The facts in this case are as follows: New Lisbon is the terminus of what is known as the Valley division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, which line of railroad extends north from that point some 200 miles, and passes through many thriving towns and cities.

Prior to 1901 this office was in receipt of an allowance for clerk hire of $240 per annum, and early in that year the postmaster made a request to the Department for an increase, owing to additional duties and responsibilities placed upon him. The postmaster was required to handle transit mail matter coming in on the night train from the Valley division, and to dispatch it from his office during the night on trains going east and west. The average daily number of registered packages delivered to his office at night and dispatched by him was about fifty, which necessitated his hiring a clerk, who remained at the post-office all night and cared for these registered packages. I indorsed the request of the postmaster to the Department, which investigated the matter and increased the allowance to $670 per year, which was the maximum allowance for a case of this kind.

On account of changes inaugurated by the Railway Mail Service in handling the mail at this place the Department made another investigation in August, 1903, which showed that under the changes made there was practically no transit matter handled through this office, and therefore discontinued the allowance, which was just and proper at the time it was made and in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Department.

The correspondence on this subject is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1901.

Hon. W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to the conditions existing at the New Lisbon, Wis., post-office. It is the terminus of the Wisconsin Valley Branch of the St. Paul Railroad, 184 miles in length, which passes through a populous country, and I am advised that the postmaster has been obliged to employ a night clerk to handle the registered matter, which is very large.

I wish you would kindly give this office your attention, as I believe it is entitled to a greater allowance than $20 per month for clerk hire. I know that the postmaster pays his day clerk $30 per month, and in addition has to pay a night clerk out of his own pocket.

Very respectfully,

J. W. BABCOCK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 24, 1901.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 22d instant, and in compliance therewith the postmaster at New Lisbon, Wis., has been directed to report the amount of transit mail handled at his office. When this information shall have been received action will be taken upon your recommendation that the allowance for clerk hire at that office be increased. I shall be glad to advise you further.

Very respectfully,

——— ———, Superintendent.

NEW LISBON, WIS., February 2, 1901.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As instructed by the Post-Office Department, I have counted the number of letters that we handled passing through this office for one week, which was 1,038; also number of registered packages handled for the last three months, which was 4,174, an average of 1,391⅓ per month, and the business is rapidly growing. The responsibility of taking care over night of these registered packages is considerable and demands a reliable man. The amount asked for is not large for the work done.

Respectfully,

F. E. HURD, Postmaster.

NEW LISBON, WIS., February 2, 1901.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The number of pieces of mail handled at this office (between intersecting mail routes) for one week was as follows: First class, 674; second class, 78; third class, 118; fourth class, 198; total, 1,068 pieces, counted as instructed.

Whole number of registered packages for past three months was as follows: November, 1,115; December, 1,670; January, 1,389; total, 4,174; average of 1,391 per month.

The amount of ordinary mail usually is larger than the last week, indicating as it does the dull part of the year just now. It is the registered packages that pass through here which makes the work, and, as I stated in my letter asking for increased clerk hire, most of them come in at 11 p. m., midnight. They are all held here over night, making at times 50 to 100 on hand, which makes my responsibility larger. This business is growing rapidly and increasing the work and responsibility at this office. The amount asked for will not pay a good, responsible man.

Respectfully,

F. E. HURD, Postmaster.

WASHINGTON, February 7, 1901.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to previous correspondence, I beg to state that the allowance for clerk hire at New Lisbon, Wis., has been increased from $240 to $670 per annum from July 1, 1901. This amount is the maximum possible on the basis of the postmaster's report of the transit matter handled at his office.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
Superintendent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 6, 1903.

Hon. C. M. WATERS,
Acting Superintendent Division of Salaries and Allowances.

SIR: Referring to your communication of September 26, 1903, bearing upon the request of the postmaster at New Lisbon, Wis., for clerk hire under section 309, Postal Laws and Regulations, 1902, I have to say that if you decide to cancel his allowance of $670 per annum for clerical assistance to take effect September 1, 1903, upon basis of the report received by your office from the Railway Mail Service, then this office is not entitled to any clerk hire whatever, as there are no conditions existing that would entitle the postmaster to clerk hire under section 309, Postal Laws and Regulations, 1902.

This town was practically wiped out of existence by fire some months ago and it is yet in chaos. I find there are no factories nor mail-order establishments. It is only a farming community and there is no possible show of extraordinary business being transacted under this section of the Postal Laws and Regulations.

Very respectfully,

G. T. GOULD,
Assistant Superintendent Division of Salaries and Allowances.

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 1, 1903.

Respectfully returned to General Superintendent Railway Mail Service, Washington, D. C. Your attention is invited to report made by Chief Clerk Beach, showing that for ten days from July 1 records kept by clerks on Chicago and Minneapolis line show very little transit mail matter dispatched to New Lisbon, Wis., post-office.

NORMAN PERKINS, Superintendent.

Case record, New Lisbon, Wis.
January 19, 1901, postmaster applies for increased allowance clerk hire.
January 22, 1901, Hon. J. W. BABCOCK recommends.
January 23, 1901, sent postmaster inquiry circular.
February 2, 1901, postmaster reports transit daily, 178; registers monthly average, 1,391; total, 1,569; pro rata, $670. Allowed from July 1, 1901.
August 3, 1903, Railway Mail Service reports practically no transit matter handled now.
August 24, 1903, discontinue allowance from September 1, 1903.

BOAZ.

Report shows clerk-hire allowance: Former, $140; present, $90; recommended by Hon. J. W. BABCOCK.

The facts in this case are, briefly, that this office in 1900 was in receipt of $40 per annum for clerk hire. The postmaster took the matter up through me, advising me that he believed an investigation would show that he was entitled to an increase, as he handled transit mail for a number of small offices on star-route lines. I recommended to the Department that the situation be investigated, which was done, and the allowance increased to $140 per annum based upon the report of the amount of transit matter then handled. In October, 1903, the Department made another investigation, as a result of which the present allowance is $90 per annum. Since 1900 a number of the small offices whose mail was then handled by the Boaz office have been discontinued by reason of the establishment of rural free delivery.

Case record, Boaz, Wis.
March 16, 1901, Hon. J. W. BABCOCK recommends increase.
March 19, 1901, sent postmaster inquiry circular.
April 29, 1901, postmaster reports: Transits daily, 177; registers monthly, 100; total, 277; pro rata, $140. Allowed $140 from July 1, 1901.
October 30, 1903, sent postmaster inquiry circular.
November 10, 1903, postmaster reports: Daily transits, 126; registers monthly, 37; total, 163; pro rata, $90. Reduced to $90 from December 1, 1903.

BOSCOBEL.

Report shows clerk-hire allowance—former, $220; present, $120; recommended by Hon. J. W. BABCOCK.

The allowance for clerk hire for this office had for some years been $140 per annum. In 1901 the postmaster believed himself entitled to an increase, and at his request I recommended that an investigation be made by the Department to determine whether an increase was warranted. The report was of such a character that an allowance of $220 per annum was made by the Department. After that time rural free-delivery routes were started from that office, which did away with certain smaller offices whose mail passed through the Boscobel post-office, and in 1903 the amount was reduced to $120 per annum.

Case record, Boscobel, Wis.
July 5, 1900, postmaster asks increase.
October 14, 1901, sent postmaster inquiry circular.
November 12, 1901, postmaster reports: Transits daily, 451; registers monthly, 40; total, 491; pro rata, $220. Allowed $220 from December 1, 1901.
June 16, 1903, sent postmaster inquiry circular.
July 4, 1903, inspector reports: Transits daily, 220; registers monthly, 30; total, 250; pro rata, $120. Reduced to $120.

MAUSTON.

Report shows clerk-hire allowance—former, $60; present, $50; recommended by Hon. J. W. BABCOCK.

For a number of years prior to 1899 the Mauston post-office handled transit mail for the Germantown and Suldahl offices, which were on star-route lines. About that time I transmitted to the Department a letter from the postmaster, asking for an allowance for this work. It was investigated, and the Department allowed $60 per annum. Later one of these offices was discontinued by reason of rural free delivery, and the amount was reduced in 1903 to $50 per annum.

VIROQUA.

Report contains the following correspondence concerning this office:

At Viroqua, Wis., where the salary of the postmaster was $1,700, the allowances up to January 1, 1903, were $300 for rent and $52 for fuel and light. On February 18, 1902, Congressman J. W. BABCOCK addressed the following letter to Hon. J. L. Bristow, Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General:

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1902.

Hon. J. L. BRISTOW,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

DEAR MR. BRISTOW: In case any application should come from Viroqua, Wis., for the removal of the post-office from its present location I would be glad to be notified before any action is taken in the matter.

At present the office is centrally located in a commodious brick building on a corner, where it is very convenient to all.

It seems that parties have built a new building there, and of course would like to rent their property, but I do not believe that any change should be made in the present location.

Yours, very truly, J. W. BABCOCK.

On Febuary 19 this letter was referred to the honorable First Assistant Postmaster-General, Division of Salaries and Allowances. On February 21 the following reply was made to Congressman BABCOCK:

FEBRUARY 21, 1902.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 18th, addressed to Hon. J. L. Bristow and referred to this office, I would state that no request has been received from the postmaster for permission to change site of the post-office at Viroqua, Wis. Your request to be advised before action is taken will be complied with.

Very respectfully, ——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

On December 17 Congressman BABCOCK forwarded to the Department a letter from the postmaster at Viroqua, Wis., in which it was stated that the room occupied by the post-office had been improved and heated with steam, a 25-foot addition had been built by the owners, and the office was in splendid shape to accommodate the patrons as well as the post-office force, and requested that the Congressman ask the post-office authorities for a liberal increase in the allowance for rent, fuel, and lights. He suggested that the allowances for rent be fixed at $400, and for fuel and lights at $60 per annum. The following is the letter of Congressman BABCOCK forwarding the letter of the postmaster:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1902.

Hon. GEORGE W. BEAVERS,
Chief Salary and Allowance Division, Post-Office Department.

DEAR MR. BEAVERS: Inclosed please find copy of a letter received from the postmaster at Viroqua, Vernon County, Wis., in relation to an additional allowance for rent, fuel, and lights. I would be very glad if you could see your way clear to increase his present allowance for this office to the limit allowed by law, as I know that the owners of the building have expended a large amount of money to make the office convenient for the postmaster and the patrons.

Yours, very truly, J. W. BABCOCK.

On December 17, 1902, the following reply was made to the Congressman:

DECEMBER 17, 1902.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK, House of Representatives.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 17th instant, regarding increase in allowance for rent, fuel, and light for post-office premises at Viroqua, Wis., I beg to advise you that it has been decided to allow the postmaster at this place $160 for rent, fuel, and light. He has also been advised that a lease will be made, which feature has been taken up with him for further consideration. This action is based upon your recommendation in the matter.

Very respectfully, ——— ———, General Superintendent.

On December 17, 1902, the postmaster at Viroqua was advised that it had been decided to allow him $160 per annum for rent, fuel, and light, effective from January 1, 1903.

This correspondence explains the situation clearly; but I desire to state that my request to the Department to be notified if an effort should be made to change the location of the post-office was simply for the purpose of giving the parties who were opposed to any change an opportunity to submit their views to the Department prior to any action being taken.

I believed that with the increased facilities provided by the owners of the building the allowance for rent should be increased, and so recommended; but I simply asked for "the limit allowed by law." The net increase, it will be noted, was but $108 per annum.

MINERAL POINT.

The report also contains the following concerning the above post-office:

At Mineral Point, Wis., where the salary of the postmaster was $1,500, the allowances up to July 1, 1900, were $240 for rent, $54 for fuel and light.

March 7, 1899, the following letter was addressed to Hon. J. W. BABCOCK by the division of salaries and allowances:

MARCH 7, 1899.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK, House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to matter of rent for post-office premises at Mineral Point, Wis., I beg to inform you that the annual rent requested by the postmaster, viz, $300, is somewhat in excess of amount usually allowed an office of the $1,500 grade, to which class this office belongs.

The readjustment of postmasters' salaries, based on the business transacted for the year ending March 31, 1899, will soon take place, and the Department will then have data upon which to act. If it becomes necessary to increase the rent allowance for this office, the Department would prefer to have same date from July 1 next, as the appropriation for this purpose for the current fiscal year is already exhausted.

If the business transacted at this office shows any decided increase for the past year, an increase in rent allowance will be made, or the postmaster authorized to sublet space in post-office lobby in order to make up excess rent he will be compelled to pay.

Very respectfully, PERRY S. HEATH,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

May 21, 1900, the postmaster at Mineral Point wrote Congressman BABCOCK that there had been no action taken toward increasing his allowances for rent, fuel, and light, and requested him to take the matter up with the Department and have the allowance for rent fixed at $300 per annum.

On May 25, 1900, the division of salaries and allowances wrote Congressman BABCOCK as follows:

MAY 25, 1900.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK, House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to request, made through your private secretary, for an increase in allowance for rent for post-office premises at Mineral Point, Wis., to $300 per annum, the amount paid by the postmaster at that place, I beg to advise you that the increase will be granted from July 1 next.

Very respectfully, ——— ———,
Chief of Salary and Allowance Division.

The postmaster at Mineral Point paid $300 per annum for rent of the post-office, and I urged the Department to make him an allowance to cover the full amount expended by him for this purpose. The increase amounted to $60 per annum.

MAUSTON.

The report refers to the Mauston post-office as follows:

At Mauston, Wis., where the salary of the postmaster was $1,600, the allowances up to November 1, 1902, were $250 for rent and $45 for fuel and light, a total of $295 per annum.

On October 10, 1902, Hon. J. W. BABCOCK forwarded a letter from the postmaster, who claimed he would be compelled to pay $300 rent from November 1, 1902, and stated that he did not know of a suitable room to be had at that time. He also stated that it cost him $75 per annum for fuel and light, and requested that the allowances be increased to cover these sums. The letter of Hon. J. W. BABCOCK forwarding the postmaster's letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, October 10, 1902.

Hon. GEO. W. BEAVERS,
Chief Salary and Allowance Division,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BEAVERS: I inclose herewith a communication from the postmaster of the county seat, Mauston, in my home county in Wisconsin, which explains itself, and would be gratified if you could arrange the increases he desires in the allowances for rent and fuel and light at the Mauston office.

Yours, very truly,

J. W. BABCOCK.

(In pencil:) 300 rent, 60 fuel and light. G. W. B.

The following letter was sent to J. W. BABCOCK in reply to the above:

OCTOBER 16, 1902.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
1135 Broadway, New York City.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 10th instant, relative to an increase in the allowance for rent, fuel, and light for the post-office premises at Mauston, Wis., I beg to advise you that your recommendation has been approved and an order issued fixing the allowance for rent at $300 and fuel and light at $60, effective November 1 next.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

This case is almost a duplicate of the Mineral Point situation, and is fully explained in the above correspondence. The increase involved was $65 per annum.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER].

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, however ungracious the comment may appear, it seems to me that we are unduly sensitive in regard to this subject so far as the same relates to ourselves, and that we should recall the fact that according to undoubted testimony there were gross frauds perpetrated in the Post-Office Department, and that without fear, favor, or affection, those abuses appear to have been thoroughly and exhaustively investigated so far as complicity by officers and employees of the Department are concerned, in which event our gratitude toward the chief officials of the Post-Office Department who have thus faithfully discharged a sacred duty will far exceed any temporary annoyance that we may feel because of our names being forsooth presented in an official communication in a manner which in many instances has been misunderstood and misconstrued by part of the newspaper press of the country, and not only that but by many of our colleagues.

Frequent reference during this discussion has been made to the inclusion of a great volume of cases in those stated in the report under consideration in which neither moral turpitude nor other occasion for criticism exists.

Now there is nothing in this report of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads which purports to make up the list of either unlawful or unjust actions by anybody. In the first place, the Committee on the Post-Office merely called upon the Post-Office Department for information in the line of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. In the second place, the Postmaster-General submitted to the committee a list of cases of leases of premises for post-offices and allowances for rent, etc., where Members of Congress have made any recommendation in connection therewith, instead of the more restricted list called for by the committee, and indignation has been voiced that the committee did not require the expurgation of the cases which were not within the inquiry; but for myself I gratefully express my appreciation that the committee have presented the case in connection with which is my name to the country as it appears in the communication to the committee, rather than sending the communication back in order that it might be expunged. I see, Mr. Speaker, you are holding up the gavel. Before that falls, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. WANGER. Then I desire to say that we are partly to blame ourselves for the view that the cases contained in these schedules are only cases or in any wise purport to be only cases which are subject to just criticism. Take the case in which my name figures personally, an increase of rent for the post-office at Ardmore, Pa. There was no lease canceled. The Government had no lease, and consequently the case was not called for. The office had not yet become a second-class office, but it was about to become of the second class, and the owners of the building submitted a proposition to the Government, which upon investigation was found to be most advantageous; so advantageous that Mr. Beavers, apparently anxious to do his full duty, desired a ten-year rather than a five-year lease, and in order, I suppose—for I have no personal knowledge upon that phase of the question—to secure a ten-year lease of that admirable room in a magnificent building and most desirable location in the prosperous and growing community of Ardmore, with its flourishing and increasing business and population and advancing rentals, he struck out the optional clause of revocation at the option of the Government.

This transaction will stand the fullest investigation, and I trust we may have all these facts presented to the country under an investigation authorized by the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia or a suitable substitute for the same.

I do not complain of the case being included in the list of offices where leases were canceled, because the point as to those revocations of leases which were condemned was that the revoked lease was succeeded by one at increased rental or other allowance. The lease entered into with the owners of the Ardmore building was at an apparent increase of rental and allowance, and therefore was as proper for investigation as if it had been preceded by a lease which was canceled.

My only criticism of the Committee on the Post-Office is that the report exonerates me and all of us without inquiry into the facts beyond the meager recital of some of them set out in the communication of the Postmaster-General to the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. There seems to be a very general demand on the part of the Members who are mentioned in this postal report to make some remarks respecting the matters referred to, and it seems also that the House is in that kind of a parliamentary situation whereby the time for debate on this proposition can not be extended except by unanimous consent, which consent has been refused. My parliamentary inquiry is this: If at 4.30 o'clock, when the House takes the vote, if the House by that vote refuses to lay the report on the table, will the report then be amendable and would we then proceed just the same as if there was no special order as to closing debate at 4.30?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in response to the parliamentary inquiry, states that if the House refuses to lay that resolution upon the table then it is open for any amendment that is germane, and is debatable at the pleasure of the majority, only to be cut off by the majority of the House ordering the previous question. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Action can be taken on it after the House refuses to lay it on the table.

The SPEAKER. When the special order is executed and the House disposes of the motion to lay on the table, by either refusing to lay it on the table or otherwise, then the House can take such action as it chooses on the matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the gentleman correct in that statement, and is a vote by unanimous consent of any higher order or character than a vote by the majority? That is but one method of giving its consent, and I undertake to say that a vote by a majority can undo a vote of this other character.

Mr. TAWNEY. My understanding of the parliamentary situation is this: That an order for the consideration of a matter in the House, fixed by unanimous consent, amounts to a rule and can not be changed except by unanimous consent or by the adoption of a rule reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HEPBURN. That will be binding on the committee, but not binding on the House itself.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is set aside only by an order of similar nature.

Mr. HEPBURN. But it is of no higher order—that is, an order made by unanimous consent is no higher than an order fixed in the ordinary way.

Mr. TAWNEY. I investigated the matter this morning and found this order can not be changed in any other way.

Mr. HEPBURN. It procures no superior or additional dignity from the fact that we are proceeding by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair will say that the House is now proceeding under a special order made by unanimous consent. That can not be changed by a vote, for the rule gives all the meaning of a rule to a special order, and that rule can only be changed as rules are ordinarily changed, by reports from Committee on Rules or by unanimous consent. The Chair states, however, that when this rule is exhausted, whenever the motion to lay upon the table this resolution is disposed of one way or the other—when it is laid on the table or not laid on the table—then the whole matter is before the House for amendment, and it would be subject to the ordinary rules of the House.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, it is with some diffidence that I rise to address myself to this resolution. That diffidence is occasioned in the first place because I feel compelled to dissent from some of the remarks made by several of the oldest and ablest Members of this body, Members for whom I have the highest personal respect, and for the further reason that I am constrained to dissent most emphatically from the manner of procedure which has been followed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in dealing with this resolution.

I fully appreciate the fact that in a body of this size, now having under consideration more than 13,000 bills, Members must be almost wholly governed by the action and reports of the different committees. If one had the giant intellect necessary to digest all these bills, it would be a physical impossibility for him to examine them. We are therefore compelled in most matters to rely upon the committee report. It is in recognition of these facts that committees are provided.

I came here with the expectation of being governed generally by the reports of committees.

But this matter is an exception to the general rule. Committees usually have the facts before them which are too voluminous to be presented in detail to the House.

But in this case the committee has seen fit to incorporate in its report all the evidence it obtained. So each Member has the same opportunity to draw conclusions that the members of the committee had.

Now, considering this as very much of a tempest in a teapot, I wish to analyze briefly the situation. An investigation was made by the Post-Office Department, under charge of Hon. J. L. Bristow, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, of frauds charged against that Department. He brings in an indictment in his report of Mr. Beavers, the gentleman who until recently had charge of the department fixing the allowances for clerk hire, rent, fuel, light, and other similar items of post-offices, and the rental of buildings for post-office purposes. As an incident connected with his indictment of Beavers the Department shows that it has a secret rule in use, and has had for many years, which enables its officials by the application of its principles to any given place to determine what allowance to make for these purposes.

Incidentally in his report Mr. Bristow states as one of the counts against Beavers that he exceeded in many instances in granting these allowances the amounts permitted under this secret rule, that it had been done at the solicitation of Senators and Members of Congress. But, fearing lest an improper construction should be placed upon this reference to Members of this body, he explains that they were ignorant of the schedule contained in the secret rule or regulation, and assumed that the Government official having charge of such matters would do his duty and not exceed the allowances permitted under Department regulations. The rule being secret, of course the Senator or Congressman could have no knowledge as to whether its terms were violated or not by Mr. Beavers.

I came here as the sole representative of a body of people numbering in the vicinity of 400,000, with something like 700 post-offices. The population in my State was rapidly increasing by a great influx of immigrants, and this naturally resulted in an enormous growth in the postal business and increased demands and necessities in the way of allowances from the Post-Office Department. Most of the requests for such increased allowances came to me, and as soon as I learned the method of procedure followed in these matters I availed myself of my privilege to visit the Department and request proper increases in many cases. In a short time the Department took my case under consideration and later informed me that, in view of the conditions which I have mentioned peculiar to my State, I would in every instance be allowed the maximum amount permitted for such purposes under their secret rule. Whether the maximum was allowed in all cases on my application or whether it was exceeded, I have no means of knowing.

But I find my name mentioned in several instances in this report, and I beg leave to state that, in my opinion, where it is mentioned once it might just as properly have been mentioned 100 times.

This matter of a Congressman acting on behalf of his constituents in the different Departments is no part of his official duty and is not required of him by law, but as a matter of convenience it has become a custom having nearly the force of law, not only in the Post-Office Department, but in the General Land Office, and in the Pension Bureau, and in all the other Departments.

I have been requested, I suppose, in more than a thousand instances to use my influence in the different Departments to secure what my constituents deemed their rights, and no part of my service as a Representative in Congress has given me greater pleasure than to aid the Post-Office Department in its effort to meet the changing conditions in North Dakota, and to serve the veterans of the civil war by securing, so far as possible, early and favorable consideration of their righteous claims in the Pension Bureau.

As to the wisdom of the different Departments recognizing Members of Congress in these matters, I do not now propose to offer an opinion. But it may be worth consideration by the proper committees in this body whether it would not be far better for all concerned, particularly in the Post-Office Department, to put all these matters on a strictly business basis and establish some rule of action by which each office can know and get that to which it is entitled.

For my efforts on behalf of my constituents I offer no apologies, and have none to offer. I only regret that in many instances I have been unable to secure what to them and to me seemed proper and adequate to meet conditions.

To illustrate this: The State of North Dakota has about thirty-five rural-free delivery routes. In proportion to population this is much less than those of some of the other States.

This shortage is not occasioned by lack of desire on the part of rural communities in my State for the service, because hundreds of petitions have been prepared and filed in the Department, but it is because the Department adheres to the rigid rule that no route shall be established serving less than 100 families, and in North Dakota the size of the farms is so great that in but few instances can 100 families be found in a drive of 25 miles from any post-office. This hundred-family rule I deem inequitable and unjust.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] introduced a resolution calling upon the Post-Office Department to furnish the information upon the basis of which the Members of this body were mentioned in the Bristow report and for an investigation. The Department furnished precisely what the Post-Office Committee called for and no more. That committee reported to this body the information given it by the Post-Office Department. It neglected to make findings or conclusions from the facts, and practically adopted the remarks made by Mr. Bristow in his report, which are the subject of complaint, and appended to the report the information obtained from the Department.

This information, taken in connection with the well-known custom, I believe, shows no infringement of law, so far as relates to allowances, on the part of any Member of this body. It shows that requests were made of Congressmen for increases in allowances, assuming that Mr. Beavers would not in any case exceed the allowance permitted by law or regulation.

I know in my own case no suspicion ever entered my mind that he would exceed his authority. But the Post-Office Committee puts this information together in such shape that from a casual examination one may almost be justified in drawing the conclusion that Congressmen have been guilty of asking increases in excess of those allowed by law or regulation, and doing it knowingly. Then they print the report, and head it, "Charges concerning Members of Congress." The construction that is put upon it can be very readily seen by the attitude of the press. The first paper which I received from my part of the country after this matter came up in the House bore great headlines, "Names of Congressmen linked with the Post-Office frauds," and in another place gave a list of the names. The public will not take the time to read through several columns of a newspaper, or the 218 pages of this report, to ascertain whether the facts justify such headlines or not.

To a very large extent the public forms its impression from the headlines of a newspaper, and even if subsequent careful reading does disclose that the headlines are unwarranted the impression first obtained remains. This resolution should have received careful consideration, and the information obtained from the Post-Office Department should have been properly classified—the material separated from the immaterial, and a report made showing the findings and conclusions of the committee. Had this been done this discussion would never have arisen. And I therefore contend that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is solely responsible for the uprising and indignation of the Members of this body.

The investigation in the Post-Office Department was undertaken by direction of the President of the United States, a man whose integrity, patriotism, and love of fair play is unquestioned. The investigation was made by Mr. Bristow, carefully and thoroughly, and without fear or favor; and, in my judgment, the report which he submitted will stand as a lasting monument to the honor of the man who made it and the Executive who directed it. As it appears to me, the facts in the matter could have been determined by any Member of the House who cared to take the time and make an effort to read carefully the information submitted in connection with the report. But several distinguished Republican Members of this House have not pursued that course apparently, but have used very severe language regarding Mr. Bristow, and have by inference criticised the Chief Executive. The character of these statements has tended to dispel the illusions that had possessed my mind that some of these gentlemen were well-balanced statesmen and fittingly considered leaders of the Republican party.

Mr. Speaker, I was born and reared on a farm far from railroads and daily mails. The daily newspaper was not received. Religious instruction was received from two papers published in Boston, known as the Congregationalist and Zion's Herald, the latter edited by Gilbert Haven. Political inspiration was almost exclusively derived from the New York Tribune, edited by Horace Greeley. Brought up in an atmostphere impregnated by the teachings of these distinguished editors I was led to conclude that everything that was which was Republican was right and everything that was which was Democratic was wrong, and I became a Member of this body deeply impressed with the idea that its Republican leaders were storehouses of political wisdom and the fountains of party sagacity. I held them in great awe, and to a considerable extent they were my idols. But I regret to say that scenes like those of yesterday and to-day have caused some of my impressions to vanish and some of my opinions to be mellowed, and many of my idols are shattered. There seems to be an ignorance on the part of many of the so-called leaders of the real sentiment of this body. They rest quietly in the belief that when certain committees make reports the membership will fall in line and support them.

I can best illustrate this from my own experience. Almost immediately upon the time being fixed for debate upon this report and resolution, I suggested to one of the distinguished leaders of this body that I might desire a little time to criticise the report of the committee, and I was informed that I had better consider the matter very carefully before doing so; that he did not think I would care to stand alone on the floor of this House and criticise the unanimous report of a great committee, or oppose the committee's recommendation to lay the resolution on the table. Time has disclosed the fact that the gentleman who made that remark is the one standing alone.

This leads to the question as to what should be done. There appears to be either of two courses open. First, to table the resolution, as recommended by the committee. If this is done it will be construed that this body dare not investigate its own membership. Second, a new and special committee can be appointed to investigate the so-called charges. Such action will admit of a charge that it is done for the purpose of whitewashing the Members named in the report. But it seems to me that such a committee can be named, constituted of men of such high reputation for integrity as to disarm all suspicion that the committee will shield any guilty person.

An investigation made with impartiality and thoroughness is due every Member mentioned and to the constituents of every such Member, and I trust that such action will be taken.

Personally I am not alarmed at anything contained in the report of the Post-Office Department or of the committee. They only go to show some activity on my part in behalf of my constituents, and the injustice done me, if any, consists in only naming a very minute fraction of the instances in which I have sought to serve them in such matters. We should be glad to have all the facts shown. This, however, can not be, and we must fall back upon the faith which our constituents have in our good intentions and their belief in the desire on our parts to serve them to the best of our ability. After all, little incidents like this will neither make nor unmake any Member of this body if he is worthy of the confidence which has been placed in him by his constituents. [Loud applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no criticism to make of the Committee on Post-Offices in sending this report to this House and I have no criticism to make upon the man who prepared that report. While there may be in it statements untruthful that affect other gentlemen, there are none, so far as I have been able to observe, of an untruthful character that affect myself. There is nothing in that report that concerns my action that I do not avow. There is nothing in that report that I would change. From first to last it exhibits, so far as it goes, the faithful manner in which I have tried to perform my duties toward my constituents. [Applause.] If I were to indulge in a criticism at all it would be for what is not stated in that report, for while there are six or eight cases that refer to myself, there might have been forty more. This report covers a period of little more than one year—less than two. It is twenty-three years since I first began to serve my constituents in this House and in the Departments, and if there is criticism just and proper to be urged against me for what is contained in this report, I undertake to say that I have been guilty during that twenty-three years more than ten thousand times. Not that I have gone to this Department that often, but to this and others.

Think of what you gentlemen like myself have done in connection with pensions. How many times have you suggested that under the proof as presented in your judgment a pension ought to be granted? Yet that is an attempt to move the discretion of an officer. What have I done more than that in this matter at bar? I have simply urged officers to exercise a discretion that was lawfully lodged in them in the interest of justice as I understood it. As an earnest of what I have said, I want to state that every copy of this report that I have been able to secure I have sent to my constituents to let them judge whether I have misapplied my time or misused my place as a Representative of theirs in this city. So far as the report is concerned, I intend to ask that I may include the portion of it that refers to me in my remarks.

There is one matter that they did not report that I would have been glad if they had, for it is the subject of the only criticism upon this subject that I have ever heard from any man living within the confines of my district. I asked that an officer, a chief clerk in the second-class post-office in my own town, be advanced in salary. I did not state the amount. They did state the amount of $1,500, and it was so made. That I entirely approved. It was a just allowance; it was within the limitation of the law. I want to state that emphatically. I hold in my hand a memorandum which I procured from the Postmaster-General, containing the law as they at the Department understand it, governing cases of this kind. I have it here and it is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1904.

Memorandum.

The act of Congress classifying clerks in post-offices was passed March 3, 1889, and provides for assistant postmasters for post-offices of the first class, salary graded in even hundreds of dollars not to exceed 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster. This law provides for the position of chief clerk at offices of the second class, salary graded in even hundreds of dollars from seven hundred to fifteen hundred dollars, but does not provide for an assistant postmaster. Prior to July 1, 1900, the appropriation for clerk hire at first and second class post-offices included also the appropriation for assistant postmasters and chief clerks. In the appropriation act for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1900, a separate appropriation was made for assistant postmasters, including assistant postmasters at second-class offices. The Department had always construed that the position of chief clerk in a second-class office was identical, so for as the duties are concerned, with the position of assistant postmaster.

When a separate appropriation was made for assistant postmasters and providing also for assistant postmasters at second-class offices a rule was adopted not to allow more than 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster, graded in even hundreds of dollars, for the assistant postmaster in a second-class office. It was recognized, however, that the law did not limit the salary of an assistant postmaster to the 50 per cent. Consequently there were a number of exceptions to the rule, and a few assistant postmasters at second-class offices received more than 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster. In the spring of 1903 it was decided that the rule not to allow more than 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster to an assistant postmaster at a second-class office would be strictly adhered to, and this necessitated the reduction of all those receiving more than 50 per cent. The classification act will be found under section 287 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, edition of 1902. Authority for paying assistant postmasters will be found under the act of Congress making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

That is the law. The officer was chief clerk of a second-class office. That man works from half past 6 o'clock in the morning until 9 at night every week day and four or five hours every Sunday. No seven hours a day for him. For years he filled a county office in his county in which he received a larger salary. He performs each day efficiently twice as much labor as do some $1,800 clerks in this city.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a word with regard to a subject that is of importance to us all. I think that, strictly speaking, there is an interference with the executive branch of the Government on the part of a Member of Congress whenever a recommendation is made or whenever a suggestion with regard to how the executive office should be administered is made.

But here is a custom, grown up from the earliest days of the Republic, that makes the Member of Congress the means of communication in thousands and thousands of instances between the constituents interested and an executive department. They have no other agent here to represent them but ourselves. They frequently believe that they are the objects, or subjects, of maladministration or neglect. They believe that they have rights that are not observed. How natural it is under this custom to write to their Representative; and it is our pleasure to serve them. They know they have a friend here in him who will take an interest in their welfare and their withheld rights. How many thousands of times have your constituents written to you, gentlemen, that they have a claim before the Pension Bureau—a claim that has been neglected? Sometimes they will tell you that for ten years that claim has lain there unattended to, and urge upon you that time is flying fast with them; that they are approaching the end, and that if that claim is to have attention that will be beneficial to them, it must be now; and urge you in the name of humanity, in the name of good comradeship, in the name of old friendships and mutual kindnesses, as their Representative, to see to it that something is done in their behalf.

How often does it occur to them that they have furnished the proof that is abundant for the allowance of their claim? Their agent is hundreds of miles from the capital; they have no representative here but you. Are you to be denied the right to go to the Pension Office to examine these proofs, to say to the man that has it in charge—that perhaps has laid it away—that there is proof there that entitled the claimant to the affirmative action of the Government? How often does it happen that you are called upon to call attention of the Department to the fact that this statute is one that should have liberal construction rather than a narrow technical one that is often given to it? The officer has a judgment to render, and you urge him to do justice to your constituent. If the statements contained in this report are a violation of duty, if they indicate crime on your part, is not this other? What is the difference?

The requests of our constituents are many, very many. Requests for aid in securing action, or favorable action, on pending pension claims come to me in great numbers. There are thousands of them every year. There are requests concerning rural free delivery, additional clerk hire in post-offices, additional rents for post-offices, additional allowances for fuel and for lights, for information or services concerning public lands, Indian claims, patents, claims for money, for aid in procuring public employment, to aid in securing promotion for almost all conceivable things. Indeed, one constituent by letter asked me to submit for him a case in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Are these letters—I receive more than a thousand every month—to be thrown in the wastebasket? For my part, I strive to render the service if I can and write the result to my correspondent in all instances. I think, Mr. Speaker, that you could find but few persons in the Eighth Iowa district who would complain that their Representative either neglected his correspondents or was neglectful of their requests.

Mr. Speaker, let me suggest that time and again in the presence of this House I have urged, when the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill was before the House, that the allowance for clerk hire in third and fourth class offices should be increased. I have suggested here that more than 50 per cent of all the people in the United States get their mail matter and all accommodations of that character at third and fourth class post-offices, while 48 per cent get theirs at first and second class offices. Twenty-one million dollars will be allowed for clerk hire in first and second class offices, and in the rural regions, such as I represent (there being only four second-class offices in my district), in these regions there is allowed, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has suggested a little while ago, $1,300,000. I have insisted that that was unjust, and I have insisted that there should be an enlargement of this appropriation, the expenditure of which we lodge in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have appealed to the discretion of the Members of this House to vote for the enlargement of that appropriation. After it was made I have appealed to the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the distribution, for the just and proper distribution, of that money so that the postmasters in third and fourth class offices in my district should have a just and proportionate share.

If the latter is a crime, is not the other? Where are you going to draw the line? Can I appeal to the discretion of a Member of this House and be without guilt, and then appeal to the discretion of an executive officer and be guilty? There is nonsense in the suggestion that I would be. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The following documentary matter is published under the consent granted to Mr. HEPBURN:

[Extracts from the Report of the Postmaster-General.]

AFTON, IOWA.

At Afton, Iowa, in 1901, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,500, the allowances were $180 for rent and $52 for fuel and light. On July 10, 1901, the postmaster reported that the Masonic lodge was erecting a new fireproof building, and would provide suitable quarters for the post-office at $240 per annum rent, stating the building would be completed by November 1, 1901. On September 4, 1901, the postmaster was advised that there would be no objection to the proposed arrangement provided no additional expense was incurred for rent, fuel, and light, as the appropriation for the current fiscal year had already been apportioned. It was suggested that he should make provision to sublet space in order to make up the additional rent required. The following entries appear on the brief of the case:

"Dec. 5, 1901. Hon. W. P. HEPBURN called and filed letter from Theo. F. Shunk, secretary Masonic lodge, stating lodge is erecting a brick building and will rent corner room for $400."

"Dec. 6th. Wrote Hon. HEPBURN $350 R., F., & L. equipment would be allowed; enclosed blank proposition."

"January 1, 1902. Theo. F. Shunk, secretary Masonic lodge, submits proposition to lease a room for $350 R., F., & L., no fixtures or safe."

"January 6, 1902. Wrote P. M. $350 R., F., & L. too high without fixtures.'

The letter of December 6 to Mr. HEPBURN was as follows:

DECEMBER 6, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to matter of allowance for rent, fuel, and light for the corner room offered by the Citizens' Bank of Afton, Iowa, for use of the post-office at that place, I beg to advise you that, after careful consideration of the matter, it has been decided to allow $350 per annum for rent, fuel, and light, complete equipment, etc.

I would state that the usual allowance for an office of the $1,400 grade is $277; for the $1,500 grade, $300, and for the $1,600 grade, $331 per annum for rent, fuel, and light.

A lease will be made on basis of $350 per annum. I inclose a blank proposition which should be filled out by owners of proposed premises and returned to this office.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The following is the letter of same date to the postmaster and his reply thereto:

JANUARY 6, 1902.

POSTMASTER, Afton, Iowa.

SIR: A proposition from the trustees of the Masonic lodge has been received. I would state that if a lease is made the furniture and fixtures should be provided by the lessors on basis of $350 rent, fuel, and light per annum, otherwise a lower estimate should be submitted. As your report of July 1 last stated that new premises could be secured for $240 per annum, you should report what can be done now in regard to this matter.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

AFTON, IOWA, January 10, 1902.

Hon. FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 6th instant and note what you say, and in reply will say that at the time I wrote you, viz, July 1, the Masonic lodge was just designing a new building and I could have availed myself of a new post-office at the rate you name, $240 per annum without heat and light; but they changed their plans to a certain extent, and, I understand, submitted a proposition to the Department at $350 per annum, including light and heat, which was accepted, I understand, and a lease forwarded for signature of trustee, which was signed properly and sent to Department. We notice the clause in lease requiring the lessors to furnish a set of boxes and fixtures, but this is unnecessary, as I have as fine a post-office outfit as can be bought, and don't need any more.

Very truly,

H. E. BOLINGER, P. M.

On January 17 a letter was written the postmaster, reviewing the facts in the case, in which it was stated:

Inasmuch as the rent for this room was previously stated by you as $240, it is considered that a complete equipment for the office should be furnished by the lessors on basis of $350, including heat, light, etc.

The owners of the premises declined to submit a proposition covering the equipment for the office, and their original proposition, on the basis of $350 for rent, fuel, and light, was accepted, with the understanding that the postmaster's equipment would be used.

ALLERTON, IOWA.

The post-office at Allerton, Iowa, was advanced to the third class October 1, 1899, the postmaster's salary being fixed at $1,000. On January 26, 1900, an allowance of $130 for rent and $44 for fuel and light was made to date from January 1, 1900. The salary of the postmaster was increased to $1,100 in 1901.

On January 14, 1901, Hon. W. P. HEPBURN transmitted a letter from the postmaster, who asked that his rent allowance be increased to $160 per annum, and stated that the owner of the building wanted $15 per month. The allowance for rent was fixed at $180 per annum from July 1, 1901, and a further allowance to cover rent, fuel, and light for the fourth quarter of 1899 was made, and the following letter on the same subject was written to Mr. HEPBURN:

JANUARY 14, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN,
House of Representatives, United States.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the visit of your secretary to the Department to-day in regard to an increase for rent at Allerton, Iowa, I beg to state that the condition of the appropriation will not admit of any increase at present. However, the allowance for rent will be increased to $180 per annum, to take effect July 1. I will also allow the postmaster credit for $32.50 expended for rent and $11 expended for fuel and light for the quarter ended December 31, 1899.

I trust this will be satisfactory.

Very respectfully,

——— ———, Superintendent.

BEDFORD, IOWA.

At Bedford, Iowa, prior to July 1, 1901, the salary of the postmaster was $1,700, and the allowances were $180 for rent and $56 for fuel and light. On March 7, 1901, a proposal to lease the building then occupied for a term of five years from July 1, 1901, at $400, with equipment, heat, and light, was forwarded to the Department by Hon. W. P. HEPBURN, and accepted. Mr. HEPBURN's letter and the reply thereto are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, March 7, 1901.

Mr. G. W. BEAVERS,
Chief Salary and Allowance Division, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hand you herewith proposition of Mr. John J. Clark, postmaster at Bedford, Iowa, for leasing his building in which the post-office is now located for a term of five years. Mr. Clark has been in the city a few days, and he informs me that buildings similar to the post-office building, located on the same street, rent from $30 to $40 a month, without either light or heat furnished. Mr. Clark also pays out $960 a year clerk hire in order that he may give the patrons of the office the best service possible, and his clerk-hire allowance is $40.

In view of these facts, it would seem that you would be fully warranted in accepting his proposition, which I inclose. I earnestly hope that you can do this.

Your obedient servant,

W. P. HEPBURN.

The location is desirable for the post-office and has been so occupied to the satisfaction of the patrons for six or eight years.

W. P. H.

MARCH 8, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 6th instant, forwarding a proposition from Mr. John J. Clark, of Bedford, Iowa, relative to leasing post-office premises at that place, I beg to advise you that the proposition of Mr. Clark is accepted, in accordance with your recommendation, and leases will be prepared and forwarded to him for execution.

Very respectfully,

———,
Superintendent.

A subsequent proposal calling for reservation of a space 6 by 20 feet in the lobby for a news stand, without any reduction in the rent, was accepted after protest from the Department, the notification to Mr. HEPBURN of this action being as follows:

MARCH 27, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to the matter of leasing post-office premises at Bedford, Iowa, I beg to advise you that the proposition of Mr. Steele to lease the present post-office premises on a basis of $400 from July 1 next has been accepted, and he has been granted the use of space in the post-office lobby for other purposes. This action is in accordance with your wishes in the matter and desires of the postmaster.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

CORNING IOWA.

At Corning, Iowa, in 1901, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,800, the allowances were $300 for rent and $58 for fuel. The following entry appears on the brief of the case:

"Allow $460, R., F., & L. with lease. Get formal blank from P. M. (Advise W. P. HEPBURN, M. C.) G. W. B."

Notification of the decision was as follows:

AUGUST 13, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN, House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to matter of leasing post-office premises at Corning, Iowa, I beg to advise you that it has been decided to allow $460 rent, fuel, and light per annum from August 1. The lease will be made with owner of post-office premises.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

AUGUST 13, 1901.

POSTMASTER, Corning, Iowa.

SIR: It has been decided to allow $460 for rent, fuel, and light for present post-office premises, and also to make a lease for a term of five years. You will please have owner of premises fill out the inclosed blank forms, which should be returned to this office.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

ESSEX, IOWA.

The post-office at Essex, Iowa, was advanced to the third class on January 1, 1902, the salary of the postmaster being $1,000. On December 5, 1902, as shown by brief of the case, Hon. W. P. HEPBURN called and filed a letter from T. K. Elliott, cashier of the Commercial National Bank, offering to lease a room adjacent to the bank, and furnish heat and light, for $300 per annum. In response to this the following letter was addressed to Mr. HEPBURN:

DECEMBER 6, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to the matter of securing better quarters for the post-office at Essex, Iowa, as recommended by you, I beg to inform you that this office will be assigned to the Presidential grade on January 1, 1902, and salary of postmaster fixed at $1,000 per annum. The usual allowance for rent, fuel, and light for an office of this size is $174; for an office of the $1,000 grade, $196. As the Commercial National Bank will furnish a suitable room for the office it has been decided to allow $250 per annum if the bank people will provide the fixtures and furniture for use in the office.

As a change in site is involved, the postmaster should ask for permission to change site and the matter will be taken up for consideration.

I inclose a blank form of proposition, which should be filled out by the Commercial Bank and returned to this office.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Form of of proposal to lease the building referred to for five years from January 1, 1902, at $250 per annum, dated December 11, 1901, was referred to the Department with the following indorsement:

"Respectfully referred to chief of division of salaries, etc., together with the inclosed contract. I hope the matter may be closed up at once.

"W. P. HEPBURN."

The proposal was accepted, as shown by the following:

DECEMBER 17, 1901.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN,
House of Representatives, United States.

SIR: Referring to matter of securing better quarters for the post-office at Essex, Iowa, I beg to inform you that the proposition of Mr. T. K. Elliott, as recommended by you, has been accepted, effective from January 1, next.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

MOUNT AYR, IOWA.

At Mount Ayr, Iowa, up to July 1, 1902, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,700, the allowances were $240 for rent and $54 for fuel and light.

On May 17, 1902, Hon. W. P. HEPBURN submitted a proposition from Howard Tedford to lease the premises then occupied, with equipment, heat, and light, for a term of five years, at an annual rental of $460, which was accepted. Mr. HEPBURN's letter and reply thereto are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
May 17, 1902.

Mr. GEORGE W. BEAVERS,
Chief Division Salaries and Allowances, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I transmit herewith certain papers relating to an increase in the rent allowed for the post-office building in Mount Ayr, Ringgold County, Iowa. I respectfully call your attention to the letters of Hon. George S. Allyn and Lloyd Talley, both reputable men, who estimate the value of said building at from $3,500 to $4,000. The other letters are from merchants renting buildings adjoining the post-office building, and from these letters it will be seen that the rent allowed for the post-office building is not nearly as high as other adjacent buildings of similar size are now renting for. The rent allowed is $20 a month, and I submit that this allowance does not pay a fair rate of interest on the money invested, when taxes, insurance, and necessary repairs are taken into consideration.

I submit herewith a proposition from the owner of said post-office building offering to rent the same to the Government for $460, he to furnish fuel and lights. I respectfully recommend that the proposition be accepted by the Department.

Your obedient servant, W. P. HEPBURN.

MAY 20, 1902.

Hon. W. P. HEPBURN, House of Representatives.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 17th instant, relative to acceptance of proposition of Mr. Howard Tedford to lease room for post-office purposes at Mount Ayr, Iowa, I beg to advise you that his proposition has been accepted, effective July 1 next, in accordance with your recommendation.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
General Superintendent.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I have just listened with pleasure to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and I think he goes to the meat of this question. Large sums are appropriated for first and second class post-offices for clerical help in those offices.

But for separating-clerk hire for third and fourth class post-offices very small sums are appropriated. There was allowed in the last post-office appropriation bill for separating-clerk hire for third-class post-offices $1,300,000. It is charged that Members of this House, by using influence, induced the Post-Office Department to grant excess of clerk hire in this class of post-offices.

I want to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that the Post-Office Department has refused to pay out the $1,300,000 appropriated for this purpose; that it has refused to properly apportion this money to these third-class offices; that in its apportionment for this fiscal year, which will close July 1, only $1,106,000 has been allotted, leaving a balance of $193,000 that stands yet to the credit of these offices on the books of the Department and will go back into the Treasury of the United States on the 1st of July, less $65,000, which was diverted to another appropriation,

In view of that fact, in view of the very limited appropriation that was made, I want to say that Members of Congress have a right to say to this Executive Department, "You should expend the money appropriated by Congress. You are an Executive Department; this money is appropriated for you to disburse, and when you refuse to disburse it and retain in the Treasury $193,000 that belongs to this poorly and inadequately paid labor you are violating your duty as an executive officer."

A Member of Congress has a right to go to that Department and say, "You ought to comply with this duty; you ought to apportion this money as the law contemplated." This appropriation was so limited that in many offices in the country young lackies are employed at from $15 to $20 per month and compelled to work twelve to fourteen hours per day and even at this low wage the postmaster is compelled to pay most of it out of his salary.

At one office in the district I have the honor to represent $100 clerk hire was allowed. The postmaster at that office receives a salary of $1,400. What does he have to do? He pays one clerk $35 a month to work fourteen hours a day. He pays a young lady $4 a week for working ten hours a day. He thus pays $628 clerk hire out of his salary of $1,400; and they say at the Post-Office Department that the $100 allowed to that office for clerk hire was excess clerk hire! I deny it.

I have the right to say to this Executive Department that a postmaster who is paying $35 a month to a young man who works fourteen hours a day, and who is as competent as any of the $1,800 clerks in the Department, and is paying $4 a week to a competent young lady who works ten hours a day, is entitled to a reasonable allowance for clerk hire. Yet, at the Department they say that $100 was excess clerk hire for that office.

Why, sir, that postmaster has only $772 left out of his salary, and if he paid these clerks the wages of a day laborer, and only required them to work eight hours a day—not seven hours or seven and a half, as they work in the Department—he would not have a nickel of his salary left. [Applause.] Yet, with $193,000, that ought to have been allotted to the credit of this branch of the service, the $100 allowance was discontinued.

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to go to the country upon this record. Notwithstanding the fact that the great press of the country has got wrong on some of these questions, they will get right. The press always gets right when they get the facts before them.

They will do justice in this matter when they realize that the third-class postmasters of this country are being compelled to pay out of their salaries this clerk hire and to employ clerks at wages that are a disgrace to humanity, a disgrace to this great Government of ours, to employ people at $4 a week to work ten hours a day, and to employ an active and competent young man competent to issue money orders, competent to handle the money of the Government, competent to register letters, competent to transact the general business of a post-office, at a salary of $35 a month, working fourteen hours a day.

Now, just a moment as to leases. In one city in the district there was a post-office down on a side street; and being a little proud of the district I represent, I said that the post-offices ought to be on the main business streets.

The post-office in this city was moved to a central location; a building was beautifully arranged for it; the second story of the building was taken out altogether, so that there was 18 feet of space from the floor to the ceiling; a skylight was put in; clean boxes and clean furniture put in; a fire and burglar proof safe put in; an arrangement that the mails might be brought in from an alley in the rear on a track in a car and put into the post-office in that way instead of dragging the mail bags along the ground.

The post-office was equipped by one of my constituents and rented to the Government for $600 a year, including heat, light, fire and burglar proof safe, boxes, and everything.

Now, the Government in turn rents my constituent's boxes to the people of that city, and at the end of the year the Government has got an income of $731 from the property of this gentleman, which they rent for $600, and the Government is $131 to the good, having received the use of the building, the use of the boxes, the use of a fire and burglar proof safe, light, and heat, and getting a net profit of $131.

In another instance one of my constituents furnishes a building, heat, light, boxes, and everything complete. The Government rents the boxes to the people of the town in which my constituents live, and gets $18 a year more than the whole thing costs the Government. So the Government is $18 to the good; the Government is speculating upon my constituents.

The net result was that in seven towns of my district the post-offices were changed into new buildings with first-class equipments, and the buildings rented to the Government by constituents of mine, and for the seven buildings in seven towns and cities the Government is only out $180 a year. The box rents pay all but $180 a year.

Yet they say that is bad business. I am proud of the business transaction, and if the Government of the United States, through its Post-Office Department, will conduct its business as carefully as it has in these leases many thousand dollars will be saved. Now, see the difference. The minute an office pays $2,000, what results?

Why, the postmaster gets a deputy postmaster at a thousand dollars a year—one-half the salary of the postmaster. He gets clerks paid for by the Government; but the poor fellow who gets less than $2,000 salary has got to pay from his own pocket the clerk hire.

Why, I wrote my postmasters to find out how much they paid for clerk hire, and I find in one case in my district, by reason of free rural delivery, the postmaster has got to hire another clerk, and when he does that he will not have salary enough to pay the three clerks of his office.

I know a district in Pennsylvania, represented by a distinguished Member on this floor, where a postmaster is to-day paying out more clerk hire than he gets for salary, and yet this is the class of post-offices in which they say that excess clerk hire has been paid, notwithstanding this Executive Department of the Government has kept in the Treasury of the United States $193,000 of the appropriation made for this fiscal year that is yet unapportioned for the purpose for which it was appropriated.

Mr. WATSON. How much more have they asked for?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Gentlemen, it is not fair, it is not right, for an Executive Department to make that kind of a charge, in view of the fact that the appropriation has not been exceeded and the amount appropriated has not been paid out. [Applause.]

The Post-Office Department has asked for clerk hire for this same class of offices for the fiscal year 1905, $1,700,000. What do they want $1,700,000 for if they will not pay out $1,300,000 which they now have?

I have only risen for the purpose of calling attention to this fact—that not only has there not been excess clerk hire paid, but there is to the credit of these poor underpaid clerks $193,000 that ought to be allotted to them.

The clerks in offices paying more than $2,000 are fairly well paid and only work eight hours per day. The clerks in the Department at Washington are well paid and work seven hours per day.

The clerks in third-class offices work long hours, in many cases twelve to fourteen hours per day, and receive less pay than any other class of Government employees.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the pending resolution or some substitute therefor providing for a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the conduct of Members of the House in connection with alleged abuses in the Post-Office Department, but I shall oppose the proposition to investigate the business of the Department itself. I would not favor even an investigation of the Members of the House were it not for the fact that an impression seems to have gone abroad that certain Members have been guilty of irregularities in connection with practices in the Post-Office Department.

Official dishonesty is one of the gravest crimes against civilization. The business of the people has to be intrusted to public officers, and they are selected by the best means known to our system of politics, in order to secure efficiency and integrity. A public officer who violates the sacred trust confided in him deserves the severest punishment that the law provides. Members of this House are elected by their respective constituents in the belief that they are able and honest and that they will faithfully discharge the duties of their office. Members of this body can not afford to rest under the suspicion that their public conduct has been irregular in any degree.

I have carefully read the report submitted by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in connection with the pending resolution, and I do not believe it reflects upon a single Member of the House in any degree.

I have been a Member of Congress for about seven years, and I am gratified to be able to say that I have never met with a body of men of a higher standard of morals, integrity, and ability than the House of Representatives has contained during that time. However, misinformation has been disseminated throughout the country respecting the relationship of the Members of the House to the Post-Office Department, and it is due to the public and to the House itself that a thorough and rigid investigation of every ground of suspicion be made. If there be a Member of this body who has abused the trust the people have reposed in him, it ought to be known without delay. If the membership is clean and innocent of irregularity, that fact ought to be known, in order that the people may be assured that their Representatives have faithfully discharged the duties that the law imposes upon them.

There is a grave misapprehension of the import of the report submitted by the committee. Newspaper criticisms of Members of Congress based upon that report are absolutely unjustified. About a year ago there was a suspicion that certain officers in the Post-Office Department were guilty of serious abuses of their official duty. The Postmaster-General designated Mr. Bristow to make an investigation of the alleged abuses. The investigation involved George W. Beavers, who was the superintendent of the salary and allowance division, and A. W. Machen, who was superintendent of the rural free-delivery service in that Department. Beavers, among other things, was charged with having been improvident and negligent in making allowance for clerk hire, rent, and fuel for post-offices throughout the country. It was claimed that he made these allowances without authority of law and simply upon the request of Members of Congress. It has never been charged that Mr. Beavers received any bribe or reward for making allowances on these lines, but it was charged that he committed these abuses simply as a matter of favor.

In the investigation that followed Mr. Bristow took up every case of allowance for clerk hire, rent, and fuel that had occurred during the entire administration of Mr. Beavers, and the investigation disclosed that Beavers was guilty of many irregularities in the particulars mentioned. He increased allowances for clerk hire and rent that were improvident and unauthorized, and in most instances the irregular allowances have been discontinued. In making his report to the Postmaster-General upon these matters Mr. Bristow included in the report only such facts as were required to illustrate the methods employed by Beavers in his official conduct. The conduct of Members of Congress was not under investigation. Their relationship to the salary and allowance division of the Post-Office Department was not the subject of inquiry, and it was only referred to in the report incidentally and in so far as it was necessary to fully show the facts in connection with each case where an allowance was made.

An examination of the record fully justifies and exonerates every Member of the House from blame so far as he was connected with the matter, but the report does not contain and does not purport to contain all of the record nor all of the facts as bearing upon the conduct of Members of the House. The reason for that is that the Members of Congress were not the subject of investigation. If they had been, the Bristow report would have contained all of the facts connected with their correspondence and recommendation of allowances for rent and clerk hire.

The Bristow report was given to the country, and indictments were returned by grand juries against Beavers, Machen, and others for alleged malfeasance in office. The names of Members of Congress were incidentally mentioned in connection with some of the alleged irregularities in these branches of the service, and it furnished a sufficient basis for sensational newspapers to create suspicion in the public mind respecting the rectitude of Members of Congress generally.

The resolution under consideration was introduced for the purpose of investigating the membership of the House and determining whether any Member was guilty of crime or irregularity. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and that committee requested the Postmaster-General to furnish it with information respecting the conduct of Members of Congress in connection with allowances for clerk hire, rent, and fuel. The Postmaster-General submitted a report which is palpably and manifestly taken from the original Bristow report. It uses such parts of the original report as relate to the particular matters referred to by the resolution, and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads submits that report, with the recommendation that the resolution be laid upon the table.

On investigation, it is ascertained that the report is not a full and complete statement of the conduct of Members of the House respecting allowances for clerk hire, rent, and fuel. The report was made in connection with the investigation of Mr. Beavers and not Members of the House. The reference to Members of the House is incidental only, and only such correspondence of Members of Congress is referred to as was thought to be necessary to show the manner in which Mr. Beavers administered his office. If the Post-Office Department had gone into the question with a view of determining whether any Member of Congress had been guilty of irregularity, the report would then have contained everything that the record discloses and would have fully and completely exonerated every Member from suspicion; but coming, as it does, as a compilation chiefly of the Bristow report respecting Beavers, it gives a false impression to the public.

I am therefore in favor of the appointment of a committee that will honestly and thoroughly investigate the relations of Members of the House with the salary and allowance division of the Post-Office Department and disclose everything bearing upon that relationship. I am not in favor of a Congressional investigation of the Post-Office Department, because the investigation made under the supervision of Mr. Bristow has been comprehensive and complete. He has gone to the bottom of the whole business, and has laid before the country all of the facts that tend to show any irregularity or abuse of official discretion on the part of officials in that Department.

I regret that any criticism has been made upon the floor of the House of the conduct of Mr. Bristow. I believe him to be an able and upright official, and in the investigation of abuses in the Post-Office Department he has been fair and thorough in every particular. He has spared no one on account of favor or friendship, and has impeached no one through malice or prejudice.

Occasional official misconduct will exist under all Administrations and will continue as long as human nature is as weak and frail as it is in its present stage of development, but it is the duty of the administrators of the law to ferret out all crime in official life and to vigorously punish the criminals. The country is under great obligation to Mr. Bristow for the thorough and vigorous manner in which he has unearthed crime and peculation in the Post-Office Department. The result will be wholesome in all lines of public service, and I have not only no criticism to make of Mr. Bristow, but my feelings toward him are those of gratitude and respect. Crime in official conduct is not a party question, but it is a question that concerns all of the people of the country.

An investigation will show that Members of the House have frequently made recommendations to the Post-Office Department for increases of allowances for clerk hire, rent, and fuel for post-offices in their several districts. It is a universal custom, dating back so far that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." This custom has the force of law. No man could sit in this House who would refuse to respect it. Speaking for myself, I have often gone to all of the Departments to investigate matters and to make recommendations on the request of my constituents. I have addressed thousands of letters to the various Departments in behalf of my constituents. I have never failed to respond to a reasonable request of any constituent, however humble he might be or whatever might be his politics. I have regarded it as part of my duty to do this, and when postmasters in my district have written me asking an increase of clerk hire, I have always submitted their requests to the Post-Office Department and usually with the suggestion that I hoped that the request could be granted. Every postmaster in the district I have the honor to represent was appointed upon my recommendation. They are men of character and integrity, and I am sure that no one of them would request or expect a favor that would be contrary to the law.

In submitting such requests to the Post-Office Department I have always expected that the Department would give the requests due consideration and grant them if the law permitted and refuse them if it did not.

When a postmaster believes that he is entitled to an allowance for clerk hire, the question is to be decided by the superintendent of the salary and allowance division of the Post-Office Department. That official is in possession of the history of the post-office and the statistics of its business. The question of allowances for clerk hire for third and fourth class post-offices is made discretionary in the Post-Office Department, and that Department has established certain rules and regulations respecting the granting of such allowances. Members of Congress can not know the statistics of the various post-offices in their district, and it is impossible for them to determine whether a request is within the law and the regulations fixed by the Post-Office Department or not. They can only submit the request to the Department for decision.

Under the law third and fourth class postmasters must employ their own clerks and pay them out of their salary, excepting where they separate mail for offices supplied by the star-route service or where the conditions of the business are unusual. Clerks in first and second class post-offices are all paid by the Government, and the salary of the postmaster belongs to him free from all charges. Allowances for clerk hire in separating offices of the third and fourth classes are usually made upon a count of the items of mail sent out to the star-route offices. No Congressman is able to know the number of items of mail separated in that manner, and hence they make many recommendations which are not granted, as an investigation of the facts show that they are not authorized. I have submitted requests for postmasters and asked that they be considered and, if consistent with law and regulations, they be granted, and in all the cases of this kind that I have presented in only one instance was an allowance granted and afterwards discontinued, and that was at the post-office at East Chicago.

The law, among other things, provides that "whenever unusual business accrues at any post-office the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical service." At East Chicago, Ind., the post-office is of the third class, and in 1902 the salary of the postmaster was $1,400 a year. The postmaster was required to pay all of the clerk hire out of his salary. Ordinarily, a postmaster can conduct an office of that class with one clerk in addition to his own personal services. But conditions were such at East Chicago that the postmaster was compelled to employ two and part of the time three clerks. East Chicago is an industrial town; its population is made up largely of factory employees and is composed of a great many nationalities. There are Hungarians, Poles, Bohemians, Italians, and a great many other nationalities. The population is shifting. Sometimes the factories are in operation and sometimes they are not. Many of the foreigners are unable to speak or write the English language and it is exceedingly difficult to administer the post-office under such conditions. A large number of money orders are sent to foreign countries; very few of the patrons rent boxes, but receive their mail through the general delivery, and conditions are such that it costs from four to five hundred dollars more to administer the office at East Chicago than it does to administer the average office of its class and receipts in other towns.

The postmaster in 1901 was paying out a large share of his salary for clerk hire. He was paying $30 a year for rent more than the Government allowed him. He made a personal visit to me and asked me to secure, if I could, an increased allowance of $30 a year for rent and an allowance for clerk hire. The office separated no mail for star-route offices. The postmaster was allowed $198 for rent and was paying $228. The allowance was a very small one for a town of that size.

I submitted the matter to the First Assistant Postmaster-General in the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1901.

Hon. WM. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to invite your attention to the request of Robert Ross, postmaster at East Chicago, Ind., for additional allowance for rent and clerk hire. He now receives an allowance of $198 for rent, which fully paid his expenditure in that particular until a short time ago, when the rent was raised $2.50 a month—$30 a year. I hope you will make this additional allowance.

The city of East Chicago is growing very rapidly, and contains now a population, including recent additions, of near 5,000. The office is of the third class, and its receipts are exceptionally small in relation to the population. The population is made up largely of laborers in rolling mills and other factories. There are Hungarians, Poles, Slavs, and people of almost all nationalities, many of them unable to speak or write the English language. Their mail is largely foreign and it is exceptionally hard to handle.

The postmaster is required to keep two clerks, whose services are constantly required, in addition to his own personal service. If the mail were of the ordinary character one clerk would be abundantly sufficient. A large amount of business is done in the way of the sale of foreign post-office orders. The applicants are often unable to make themselves understood and mistakes occur, and it requires time and patience to handle the business. The salary of the postmaster is only $1,400 a year. He receives nothing at all in the way of allowance for clerk hire. After paying his assistants he has comparatively little left for his own services. I know the situation personally at East Chicago, and know it to be as I have stated above. I earnestly ask you to make an allowance of three or four hundred dollars a year for post-office clerk hire in view of the peculiar circumstances connected with that office. I am sure it is justly due the postmaster and the office.

I trust you will take this matter up without delay and give it favorable consideration.

Very truly, yours, E. D. CRUMPACKER.

On the 19th of December, 1901, I received a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster-General of the following tenor:

Referring to your recent recommendation, I have to advise you that an allowance of $300 per annum for clerk hire at East Chicago, Ind., has been approved, to take effect after January 1, 1902, and the postmaster has been so advised.

This is the only correspondence I had with the office in relation to the case. I based the request for allowance for clerk hire upon the facts contained in my letter. I honestly believed then, and believe now, that the postmaster was entitled to an allowance for clerk hire. The question was discretionary with the Postmaster-General, and it occurred to me that the East Chicago case was just such a one as the law contemplated in giving that discretion to the Postmaster-General. A uniform allowance to all third and fourth class post-offices would be unjust in some exceptional cases, and the statute was intended to cover just that class of cases.

The allowance was made and ran along until the summer of 1903. Mr. Bristow was directed to investigate the administration of the salary and allowance division, and discovered that the post-office at East Chicago had been granted an allowance of $300 a year for clerk hire, and it was not a separating office, and he ordered a post-office inspector to go there and investigate the situation and ascertain whether conditions were such as to justify the allowance. Mr. D. J. Foster, the inspector in charge of that territory, carefully investigated the situation, and, on the 12th of June, 1903, made the following report to the post-office inspector in charge at Cincinnati, Ohio, which was forwarded, with his approval, to the Post-Office Department at Washington:

W. J. VICKERY, Inspector in charge, Cincinnati, Ohio.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on June 6 I personally investigated the above-numbered case, relative to the necessity for clerk-hire allowance at East Chicago (Ind.) post-office, and find as follows:

The East Chicago (Ind.) post-office is a third-class office, the force employed consisting of the postmaster, assistant, and two clerks. The business of the town is iron; the patrons of the office being mainly ironworkers, nearly all foreigners and requiring a foreign clerk to understand them. A large business is done in foreign registers and foreign money orders, and the general delivery is large. At the present time the business is lighter than ordinary, owing to the temporary closing of one of the mills. The constant changing or shifting of the foreign population causes more than ordinary work for the number of patrons compared with other offices of a like size.

The average business of the office at the present time in register and money order departments is about as follows:

Registers deposited, monthly average	125
Money orders issued, monthly average	520
Foreign money orders, monthly average	80
Money orders paid, average	200
Money-order deposits, monthly average	3,000

When both mills are in operation this is exceeded.

The expense for clerk hire at the present time is $936 a year, with other ordinary expenses of such an office. From the best information I can obtain as to the existing conditions, class of patrons, and work in the office, I would respectfully recommend that the allowance for clerk hire be continued, as I am satisfied the patrons require more labor and time than the ordinary patrons in an office of this size.

Very respectfully,

D. J. FOSTER,
Post-Office Inspector.

The report vindicates every statement I made in my letter recommending the allowance. It shows that conditions at that office were extraordinary, and that the allowance was properly made and ought to be continued.

Later on, A. R. Burr, a post-office inspector, visited the East Chicago office, making the regular annual inspection of the office that the Department requires, and learned that the postmaster was receiving an allowance of $300 a year for clerk hire and that the office was not a separating office. On the 15th of December, 1903, he made the following report to the Post-Office Department:

Mr. W. J. VICKERY,
Inspector in charge, Cincinnati, Ohio.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that an inspection of the post-office at East Chicago, Ind., on the 13th ultimo, discloses the fact that this office has an annual allowance for clerk hire of $300. This office, which is of the third class, is in no sense a distributing office, there being no transit mail handled, nor are there any unusual conditions existing which warrants this allowance. The postmaster maintains that he is entitled to it by reason of the large number of foreign money orders issued. I find, however, by comparison that another office in the immediate vicinity transacts a larger foreign money-order business than this office and receives no allowance, and it is believed that the additional labor, which at this office is not great, does not warrant the allowance.

I would therefore recommend that the allowance of $300 per annum for clerk hire at East Chicago, Ind., be discontinued.

Very respectfully,

A. R. BURR, Post-Office Inspector.

The salary of the postmaster in the meantime had been increased by the increase of business from $1,400 to $1,700 a year.

Upon the strength of this report the allowance for clerk hire at East Chicago was discontinued. In my judgment the Post-Office Department erred in discontinuing the allowance. The inspector who went to East Chicago for the purpose of specially inquiring into the facts with a view of determining whether conditions were unusual and justified an allowance for clerk hire reported the facts in detail, and showed clearly that the allowance was properly made and ought to be continued. The other inspector made only a casual and a general inspection of the office. He admits that conditions were unusual, but he said not to such an extent as to allow $300 additional for clerk hire. He says in his report that another office in the immediate vicinity transacts a larger foreign money-order business than the East Chicago office and receives no allowance for clerk hire.

There is no argument in that at all. The other office which he refers to is Whiting; and while it may transact a larger foreign money-order business than the East Chicago office, its population is of a more permanent character, and the percentage of foreigners unable to speak the English language is much smaller, and besides there is no doubt that under the law the Whiting office is entitled to an allowance for clerk hire. The only criticism I have to make of the Post-Office Department is that it discontinued the allowance for clerk hire at East Chicago. No man can make a fair investigation of that office and come to any other conclusion than that it costs from three to five hundred dollars a year more to administer it than it does the ordinary third-class office with the same receipts and the same salary.

This is the only case among all the recommendations I have made that is mentioned in the report, and that is mentioned because the allowance was subsequently discontinued. It is not claimed that the superintendent of the salary and allowance division acted corruptly in the matter. It is not claimed that he made the allowance as a matter of favor, pull, or influence. It was requested on the ground stated in my letter. It was requested because I believed that the law authorized it, and I still believe so.

I believe it to be my duty to secure for my constituents whatever rights the law gives them. I believe it to be my duty to secure for the post-offices in the district I have the honor to represent all of the equipments, privileges, and allowances they are entitled to under the law. I have acted upon this assumption, and expect to continue to act upon it.

I have made thousands of requests to the various Departments of the Government in behalf of those who have reposed confidence in me by electing me to Congress. It is not only my duty, but I regard it as a pleasure to do what I can to help along the people of the district that I represent. I have made thousands of requests upon the Commissioner of Pensions to decide applications for pensions. I would feel unworthy of the confidence reposed in me if I did not make those requests.

If the report submitted by the committee carries any reproach with it at all it is upon the practice of Congressmen performing service at the Departments for their constituents. It may be impossible for a Congressman to know whether a constituent is entitled to a thing or not. He has the right to expect that administrative officers will do justice between the people and the Government.

While the custom of Congressmen performing errands upon the personal requests of their constituents may in some instances be liable to abuse and may be subject to criticism, yet it has a great many things to commend it. People living a thousand miles from the city of Washington have claims pending for pensions or for patents, or they may desire documents or information respecting matters of government, and the natural thing is to write their Congressman about it. The Congressman is allowed a clerk at public expense so he may attend to such matters. It is a great convenience to the people, and they will never consent to give it up.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] would occupy some time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen in discussing the subject under consideration have stated that as far as they personally were concerned they had no objection to the report coming from the Post-Office Department to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in so far as the same makes reference to them.

Mr. Speaker, I am mentioned in that report, and I do not take the floor now for the purpose of apologizing or excusing any act of mine in dealing with the Post-Office Department. For many years I have held offices of trust or profit in South Carolina, and at no time has it ever been necessary for me to excuse my conduct or to apologize for any act.

I will not vote for the report from the Post-Office Committee, but no doubt it will be said that "You are a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads bringing that report into the House."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, but what are the facts? J. L. Bristow, Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, in his report filed on the 25th day of November last, on pages 138 to 145 of the report, cites many instances where specific abuses are alleged to have been perpetrated in the way of canceling long-time leases for post-office buildings and making new leases at a higher rate of rental. In a general way, he cites in that report that in some instances influential and prominent Members of Congress secured such action by the Post-Office Department, and in addition to this the charge is made that prominent Members of Congress in many instances secured increased clerk hire and allowances for separating the mails at third and fourth class post-offices when the same was not warranted by the rules of the Post-Office Department.

In the matter of allowances for separating the mails at third and fourth class post-offices Mr. Bristow was fair enough to state that the Members of Congress are not to be blamed for making an effort to secure such allowance.

In the report referred to, Mr. Bristow, at page 145, used the following language:

> The executive officer is expected to do his duty in accordance with the law and the practice of the Department. Congressmen, as a rule, want their constituents to have what they are justly entitled to and no more. It is true that there are occasional exceptions to this rule, but happily such exceptions are few. But whatever may be the request of the Congressman, the executive officer has a plain duty which the Member of Congress expects him to perform.

Mr. Bristow could not say less than this in reference to the matter. Members of Congress can not well abuse their influence in the way of securing increased allowance for separating the mails at third and fourth class post-offices for the reason that no Member of Congress knows the rule or scale followed at the Post-Office Department and governing the Department in making such allowance. This rule or scale is a secret of the Department. I do not know the rule; neither does any other Member of Congress. So that the only course to pursue, when a request comes to a Member of Congress to secure increased allowance at a post-office for separating the mails, is to submit the matter to the Department. Then an investigation is ordered by the Post-Office Department, and the allowance asked for is either made or refused according to the secret rule or scale I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, the now noted Hay resolution was brought into this House, and is as follows:

[Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, House of Representatives. Resolution No. 118.]

Whereas Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General J. L. Bristow, in his report to the Postmaster-General, dated October 24, 1903, and which report has been transmitted to a committee of this House, has charged that "long-time leases for post-office premises were canceled and the rent increased upon the recommendation of influential Representatives;" and

Whereas it is charged in the same report that "if a Member of Congress requested an increase in the clerk hire allowed a postmaster Beavers usually complied, regardless of the merits of the case;" and

Whereas certain cases of an aggravated character are cited on pages 133, 134, and 135 of said report to sustain the above charges; and

Whereas on page 145 of said report it is charged that Members of Congress have violated section 3739 of the Revised Statutes, and that "in the face of this statute Beavers has made contracts with Members of Congress for the rental of premises, either in their own names, the names of their agents, or some member of their families;" and

Whereas these charges and others contained in said report reflect upon the integrity of the membership of this House, and upon individual Members of this House whose names are not mentioned; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House appoint a committee, consisting of five members of this House, to investigate said charges; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer, and to have power to sit during the sessions of the House, and to exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of said charges, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

In the Bristow report there is a distinct charge, reiterated and repeated in the above resolution, that long-time leases were canceled at the instance of influential Members of Congress and new leases made at an increased rental, and if a Member of Congress requested an increased allowance at any post-office that Beavers usually complied with such request without inquiring into the merits of the case.

When this resolution reached the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the chairman of the committee, acting at the instance of the committee, made inquiry of the Post-Office Department for a report and detailed statement in each and every case wherein this had been done.

Mr. Speaker, I am not apologizing for the committee or for myself when I say that the great majority of cases reported by the Post-Office Department do not come within the scope of the Hay resolution or the inquiry made by the Post-Office Committee. On the contrary, a very large per cent of the cases reported bear no relation whatever to the subject-matter under consideration by the Post-Office Committee.

This report from the Post-Office Department, consisting, as I recollect, of more than 1,000 pages of typewritten matter, purporting to give a detailed statement of more than 150 cases, was referred to the subcommittee of the Post-Office Committee.

I was not a member of that subcommittee, but the subcommittee was composed of both majority and minority members. They reported to the full committee that all of the facts that could be brought out, to which reference was made in the Bristow report, were contained in the report of the Post-Office Department to our committee. That report was not read before the full committee, and the committee acted upon the belief that the report was full and complete and contained all the information obtainable in reference to the cancellation of long-time leases for post-offices and securing renewed leases at higher rentals, and so the committee made its report to the House.

Prior to the report I had examined only one case, wherein mention was made of my name, and I knew that this case could not properly be included in the list of cases about which the committee were directed to make inquiry. I believed that a mistake had been made at the Post-Office Department in this one case. I knew of my own knowledge that no long-time lease, or any other lease, had been canceled and a new lease made at a higher rental. I knew that the record in that case was incomplete, in that there was not a statement showing that the Government of the United States did not, on June 10, 1902, or at any time before or since, have a lease on the post-office building at Yorkville, S. C.

I had intended when the report came up for consideration to take this matter up and state the facts in the case.

Since the report was made I have ascertained that what is true as to the Yorkville post-office is true in a large number of other cases, and I have no hesitancy in saying now that the report sent by the Post-Office Department to the committee is in many instances incomplete, facts and documents in the cases being suppressed to such an extent as to give a false impression and one calculated to deceive.

I believe that this was intentionally done for the purpose of browbeating Congress in the matter of making an investigation in the Post-Office Department. I think that I ought to say here what I have stated to many of my friends on the minority side of this Chamber before the opening of this debate, that I do not believe J. L. Bristow to be the author of this report. I do not believe that he compiled it, read it, or approved it.

My reasons for saying this, in brief, are: That he is not a fool; and, in addition to this, I believe him to be an honest man. This report contains statements and charges that are not true. Cases are cited in it relative to the lease of post-office buildings wherein the facts are willfully and deliberately misrepresented or suppressed. So, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that J. L. Bristow, in my opinion, is not the author of that report. Who the author is I do not know. But, Mr. Speaker, the time is short when the House will know, and when we will know, who is the perpetrator of this fraud and slander upon so many Members of the House of Representatives. [Loud applause.]

Take the case of the Yorkville post-office. On page 174 the report charges that in 1902, when the salary of the postmaster at Yorkville was $1,500, the allowance for rent $125, and for fuel and light $34, $159 in all; that on June 10 the postmaster asked for an increase to $225 for rent, fuel, and light, and that on June 12 the increase was allowed at $225 from July 1.

On June 13 a letter advising me that the allowance had been increased to $225 was sent.

I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, that neither on June 10, 1902, nor at any time did the Post-Office Department hold a lease on the post-office building at the town of Yorkville, S. C.

On the 8th day of March I wrote the First Assistant Postmaster-General a letter, in which I requested a copy of all the record in relation to the renting of the post-office building at Yorkville. This was given me. With the permission of the House, I will incorporate in my remarks the record in full, as well as the letter of the First Assistant Postmaster-General above referred to, as follows:

YORKVILLE, S. C., YORK COUNTY, June 10, 1902.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Salary and Allowance Division, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Beginning July 1, 1902, I wish to make the following changes with regard to the rent of the post-office:

I wish to rent it lighted and heated. For several years past heat and light have exceeded the amounts allowed, but as my tenure of office was then so uncertain I did not apply for the proper amounts. I find that the rents on the main street (where the post-office is located) are, for brick buildings, higher than I've been getting, so I now ask for an allowance for the room rented with heat and light of $225 per annum.

As I am the executrix of the estate of T. A. Moore, deceased, I suppose it will be unnecessary to file a letter from the landlord.

Respectfully submitted by

M. M. MOORE, Postmaster.

Hon. D. E. FINLEY,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 8th instant, I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of all papers bearing on allowance for rent, fuel, and light for post-office premises at Yorkville, S. C. I would state that the Department has no lease, nor has had, on post-office premises at that place. When the allowance for rent, fuel, and light was fixed at $225 under date of June 12, 1902, as shown on face of jacket, the postmaster was instructed to protect himself, as well as the Department, with a personal lease. He was also advised that this lease, if made, would in no way be binding on the Department.

Very respectfully,

R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Why did the Post-Office Department in this report include the Yorkville post-office among those cases wherein long-time leases had been canceled and new leases made at higher rental?

The inference is plain that the person making up this report for some purpose wished to include the Yorkville post-office when there was no fact or circumstance warranting him in so doing. The record shows that the Government did not have a lease, and that on June 10, 1902, the postmaster at Yorkville (who, by the way, is owner of the building) wished to secure an increased allowance for rent, fuel, and light on the ground that the rents on the main street at Yorkville, where the post-office is located, had advanced, and that the allowances for rent, fuel, and light were too low.

Yorkville is my home town, and the request made by Miss Moore, the postmaster, for increased allowance was entirely just and proper. She wrote informing me of the fact that she had made application for an increased allowance, and in the performance of my duty as Representative of the Fifth Congressional district of South Carolina I called at the Post-Office Department and requested that the application of the postmaster at Yorkville be considered, giving it as my opinion that the amounts asked for were reasonable. As a matter of fact, the amount is reasonable.

From the time the allowance for rent, light, and fuel was fixed at $159, to 1902, when the increase was made to $225, the population of the town had increased something like 25 to 30 per cent.

When the allowance for rent, light, and fuel was $159 at the Yorkville post-office, the same was lower than at any post-office in South Carolina paying a salary of anything like $1,500 per year. For illustration I cite the following-named post-offices in South Carolina as to salary and allowance for fuel, light, and rental:

Post-office.	Salary.	Allowance.
Abbeville	$1,600	$275.00
Bamberg	1,300	178.00
Barnwell	1,400	196.66
Beaufort	1,600	236.00
Bennettsville	1,600	350.00
Clinton	1,400	275.00
Gaffney	1,600	280.00
Lancaster	1,400	205.00
Marion	1,400	243.83
Pelzer	1,300	203.40
Winnsboro	1,500	179.78
Summerville	1,500	205.00
Yorkville	1,500	159.00

On June 10, 1902, the salary was $1,500, and the allowance for rent, light, and fuel was increased to $225. This is a smaller sum than is paid for similar allowance at any post-office in South Carolina where the salary is as large as $1,500 per year. And I may add that the salary is now $1,600 per year, because of the growth of the business of the office. So that, Mr. Speaker, the Yorkville post-office was not leased to the Government at the time the allowance was made; and that allowance, as it stands to-day, is lower than that of any other South Carolina post-office of the importance of Yorkville.

The meanness of those compiling the report from the Post-Office Department does not stop with wrongfully placing the Yorkville post-office in the category of cases wherein long-time leases were canceled at the instance of Congressmen and new leases made at increased rentals, but that office is also named in the report in the list of offices where the salary allowance for separating the mails has been reduced or discontinued. Why this should be done I am at a loss to understand, because the report of the Post-Office Department states as follows:

> Yorkville, S. C.: Salary of postmaster, $1,600; former allowance clerk hire, $200; present allowance clerk hire, $100.

And in the column marked "Excess" there is no entry whatever. There is no other mention of this matter in the report of the Post-Office Department sent to the committee, and the letter of the Postmaster-General transmitting this statement along with some 900 other cases makes this statement: That—

> Where no comment is made the allowance has been discontinued by reason of the introduction of rural free delivery and the consequent discontinuance of a star-route mail service, there being no separating service at such offices.

I can understand this, for within the past three years six rural free-delivery routes have been inaugurated at Yorkville, S. C., and there is no star-route service starting from that office. But it may be stated by some evil-minded person that this is put down for the reason that the amount was excessive at the time such allowance was made. This can not be true, for the reason that in a headnote to the list given by the Department there is this statement:

> NOTE.—Where no excess is shown the allowance was warranted at the time it was granted.

So, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I am unable to give a reason why the Yorkville post-office is mentioned in the report from the Post-Office Department either as to allowance for rent, light, and fuel or for the allowance for clerk hire for separating service, except upon the theory that it was done for some sinister purpose.

I have served my State in many capacities of official life. I have now entered upon my twelfth year as a legislator, and I may say that in all of my career in public life, extending over a period of some fifteen or sixteen years, I have never been attacked for any official act of mine; I have never been criticised for a public act, and at all times I have served the people whose representative I am to the best of my ability, and, as I believe, to their satisfaction.

In the five years I have been a Member of Congress I have brought to the attention of the Departments hundreds of instances in which my constituents were interested, and I may say that in the matter of post-offices I have directly secured action in matters affecting probably one-half of the whole number in my Congressional district.

What I have stated is not an apology or a defense, but it is only proper that I should set the record right. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, the preparation and promulgation of this document presented to this body by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is a wrong to many Members of Congress on both sides of the Chamber and to many at the other end of the Capitol. Some one is responsible for it. Whoever prepared it did so with a well-defined purpose. The question now is, Who is responsible for this report and what was the purpose behind its promulgation?

It has been repeatedly charged on this floor that Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow is its author, and for two days he has been accorded a full measure of abuse, and many denunciations have been heaped upon him because of this belief. So far as I am concerned, I acquit him of all responsibility in this matter, and will give you my reasons for so doing.

You have just heard the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], who is a member of the committee which brought this document here—speaking, of course, in the light of all the information he has on the subject—state that he is confident that General Bristow did not compile this document, has not read and does not approve it. What further evidence do we have on the subject? Day before yesterday we heard the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] emphatically assert that General Bristow, who is now confined to his home, feeble because of serious illness, had been asked about this document, and that he had never seen this report as it is printed.

Let us inquire further. Yesterday morning the Washington Post contained an article on the origin of this document. The ever-alert newspaper reporter, determined to get at the facts, went to the fountain source. Let us see what was ascertained. Let me read it:

> Not Bristow's work—Fourth Assistant did not prepare special report—He wrote only few pages.

These are the headlines. I will not read all the article, but only that part bearing directly on the issue involved. Hear what he said:

> Mr. Bristow did prepare the letters of January 25, as they appear on pages 4 to 7, inclusive, of the special report. On that day, however, he was taken ill with the grip, and has not been back to his office since but once, and then for about an hour. Directions were given to the officials in charge of his department to prepare the information, as requested by the Postmaster-General, regarding leases only.

There it crops out who is responsible. Directions were given to do what? To prepare this information as requested by the Postmaster-General. Thus it is disclosed who is responsible. These facts conclusively show that Henry C. Payne, the Postmaster-General, is the guilty man; this man who is known as the "smooth politician of the Cabinet," and who, it is also said, is at all times engaged in playing slick politics. General Bristow was at home sick at this time, and could have taken no part in the preparation of the report except as he has stated. Now, let us look at the document itself.

You find here double confirmation of the Postmaster-General's guilt. An examination of this document shows that the first three and a half pages are covered by the report of the Post-Office Committee and the letters of the chairman of that committee asking certain specific information of the Post-Office Department. The next three pages, from the fourth to the middle of the seventh, relate to leases of buildings (three of them), made to Members of Congress. This is the work of Bristow, and you will find it signed by him. The remainder of this document was sent here, as I have shown, and as an examination of the document itself will show, by the slick politician of the Cabinet, the Postmaster-General. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, what was the purpose of this report? Let us go back for a few months and note a few happenings at the inception of the scandals and frauds which completely envelop the Post-Office Department. Mr. Speaker, I am not versed in criminology. I make no pretension to a profound knowledge of that science; but I was the State's attorney, engaged in the prosecution of felons for eight years before I came to Congress, and during that period of my life I had exceptional opportunities for observing the characteristics of criminals.

I had many opportunities to note the methods resorted to by those who had violated the law in their efforts to escape the consequences of their illegal acts. I have observed, and we all know, that it is a common practice for one suspected of crime to make light of the charges brought against him and to belittle the evidence tending to show his guilt. Especially is this true when a criminal is first accused. If this ruse results in failure, the criminal then resorts to another common expedient. He attempts in some way to divert attention from himself to something else or to some other person.

Now, do you recall that when the first suspicions were rife in this land that there was fraud in the Post-Office Department the man who is responsible for this document, the head of the great Post-Office Department, was approached by emissaries of the press, that the matter involved in these serious charges was brought to his attention, and that he was pressed to give some statement with reference thereto? What did he do? How naturally he acted then! He made light of the charges and belittled the evidence adduced. Being further pressed by the vigilant news reporters, he was finally compelled to make answer, and then he spoke jestingly, saying: "You may state that the Postmaster-General just laughed."

I do not agree with my friend from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] that the press always gets right when they get the facts before them. As I see it, some of them are never right, either before or after they get the facts. But, Mr. Speaker, in this particular case they were right; the Postmaster-General could not divert these sagacious gatherers of news. Feeling sure that they had struck a lead which would pan out, they insisted that the mirthful gentleman who was at the head of this Department of our Government should treat the charges with that seriousness which they deserved.

The Postmaster-General vehemently resisted investigation, protesting again and again that there was nothing whatever in the charges. Finally public opinion crystallized, and from one end of this country to the other the demand was made for an investigation. The Postmaster-General still resisted, but finally the pressure became so strong that the alert gentleman who was the one to be seriously affected if this universal demand was further ignored ordered an investigation of two divisions of this Department. The press of this country is justly entitled to credit for forcing this partial investigation, and I gladly accord it to them.

What followed? The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General was directed by the President to examine the division of salaries and allowances and the division of free delivery. When these two divisions had been investigated two divisions that handle less than one-tenth of the vast sum appropriated by Congress to be expended by that great Department, it was conclusively shown that one reeked with rottenness and that the other was steeped in corruption.

A casual reading of the disclosures made during that investigation convinces any intelligent man that in one of these divisions bribery was an everyday occurrence, and that in the other thievery was a common practice. And yet, when the matter was first pressed upon the attention of the gentleman who, in my opinion, is responsible for this document, the press reports that "the Postmaster-General just laughed."

Mr. Speaker, as a result of Bristow's investigations, official after official has been discharged from the two divisions investigated, and man after man has been indicted, and four men—one an ex-official—have been convicted and sent to the penitentiary.

It has been hurled across this aisle that this ex-official is a Democrat. A Democrat indeed! A sublimated Democrat of modern type; one so pure that he could not stand for a debased currency! So supersensitive that he wanted honest money of the kind demanded by the Republican platform in 1896, at which time he joined the Republican party, voted that ticket, and commenced stealing. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I do not pretend to trace any relation between cause and effect in this instance. I simply make a statement of facts with reference thereto. [Laughter.] I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that there is no politics in the subject-matter under discussion. But, Mr. Speaker, it is a coincidence, to say the least about it, when we note the fact that the Republican national machine somehow or other is every time either interested in those implicated or are in some way themselves connected with these frauds in the postal service. This interest manifested itself from the first development of Rathbone's venality in Cuba down to the period when its secretary hastily resigned to escape removal.

And it is also said that before he took this step there was considerable restlessness on the part of a certain high official, occasioned by fear of the effect which said secretary's continuance in that position would have on the contest in the coming November. And I venture the prediction that if a sweeping investigation is made of the Post-Office Department it will be speedily followed by the resignation of one more official of the Republican machine—its present head.

But, gentlemen of the House, this is a digression. I return to the discussion of this report. When the result of the investigation of these two divisions was known, when the public realized that fraud and corruption were there rampant, when it was known that bribery and theft had been practiced there time and time again, covering a period of years, there was an increased demand for a further investigation. It is true that there was an effort made to satisfy this public clamor when the gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue, after the report was published, complimented the mirthful gentleman at the head of the Post-Office Department upon the result of the investigation and the purification that had taken place in his Department.

But this attempt to forestall a further investigation of this rotten Department also failed. [Applause.] The demand for further investigation continued to make itself felt. It would not down. Instead of subsiding it continued to gather strength. It finally found expression in this body in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. That resolution struck terror to the soul of the mirthful gentleman who presides over this Department and who is responsible for this document. The thought of further investigation of his Department was to him intolerable.

Remember that the two divisions investigated spend less than one-tenth of the money we appropriate for the Post-Office Department. The thought of an investigation, for instance, of the expenditure of the $39,000,000 for transportation of the mail by the railroads made the Postmaster-General's blood chill. How could he avoid it? He had failed in the expedient first resorted to when he sought to laugh away these charges. This document is now prepared as a cunning ruse to divert attention from the never ceasing demand for an investigation of his Department and fasten it on the suspicion he endeavors to engender in the mind of the public with reference to Members of this body and the Senate. This is my reason for believing him responsible for this document.

I do not, however, absolve the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of all blame. I have said that they are censurable in one particular at least, as I will now show.

After the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] had been considerably emasculated by technical parliamentary points of order urged against it by Members of the Republican side, it was, as we all know, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. During its consideration by that committee, its chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], addressed the Postmaster-General a letter intended to elicit certain information. I now read it:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1904.

Hon. HENRY C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of a letter of this date from Hon. J. L. Bristow, Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, replying to my request made to you in my letter of January 23, in which he informs me that he has been unable to fully comply with my request, but can, if granted more time, send to the committee a complete list of cases relating to both clerk hire and leases referred to.

In view of the references of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in his report to you under date of October 24, 1903, to the action of Members of Congress in recommending increase of clerk hire, and cancellation of leases and their renewal at a higher rate, I request that this committee be furnished at the earliest practicable date a complete list of all cases referred to in said report relating to allowances for clerk hire in offices where those allowances have subsequently been discontinued, and also of all cases where leases of post-office premises have been canceled and renewed at a higher rate, together with a statement in detail giving a full explanation of the facts connected with each case.

Very respectfully, JESSE OVERSTREET, Chairman.

You will note that as to leases of buildings, the request was for "all cases where leases of post-office premises have been canceled and renewed at a higher rate," etc., etc.

Now, gentlemen, let us see how this slick political member of the Cabinet answered this request. I read you his reply.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1904.

Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Further replying to your communication of January 25, 1904, I have the honor to transmit herewith an abstract of the files of the division of salaries and allowances concerning leases of premises for post-offices, and allowances for rent, fuel, and light at post-offices, where Members of Congress have made any recommendation in connection therewith.

Respectfully, yours,

H. C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General.

Note now, that instead of giving the list as requested, the Postmaster-General furnishes a list where Members of Congress have made "any recommendation in connection therewith."

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], a member of the committee, admitted here a moment ago that the committee asked of the Postmaster-General exactly what the Hay resolution called for. This is true, as is shown by the letter of the chairman, Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman also admitted that a proper response to that request would have brought twelve or fifteen cases. But the wily Mr. Payne sent in this report more than 100 cases that were not called for, thereby hiding the twelve or fifteen among the greater number.

I said then that this was an outrage, and I repeat it. It is no answer to this complaint for the gentleman from Missouri to say that the sunlight of publicity never hurts an honest man. The hurt is not to come from the sunlight of publicity, but from the fact that you have been the means of publishing far and wide the names of 100 gentlemen who you admit have been guilty of no wrong, not even an impropriety, in connection with this scandalous transaction.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] who has just taken his seat says that he will not apologize for his committee or himself, but that as a matter of fact the great majority of cases reported by the Post-Office Department in this document do not come within the scope of the resolution or the letter of inquiry addressed by the committee to the Post-Office Department for information; that, on the contrary, they bear no relation whatever to the same. All I have to say is that he ought to offer some excuse for his committee. [Applause.]

With the lights before me, it looks as though the Postmaster-General overreached the entire committee. He has worked them. [Laughter.] I again ask, why did not this committee when this document was sent to them return it to the mirthful gentleman who has charge of the Post-Office Department and say to the slick politician: "You can not hide the names of those persons asked for by the committee by sandwiching them among the names of one hundred gentlemen who are guiltless of even impropriety. Take this and answer as we have asked."

A little practical sunlight would have come in very well just at this point. [Applause.] Why did they not say further to him: "You can't divert attention from the real issue here by any slick practices?" Now, permit me to show you on what flimsy grounds some gentlemen's names are dragged into this mire. Take this case of my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas], recognized by everyone in this Chamber as the soul of honor, against whom slander has never attempted even a whisper. He writes this letter, as it was his duty to do, and for this his name is published in this report.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 2, 1901.

Honorable FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose you herewith application for increase of clerk hire in the post-office at Quanah, Tex. Will you kindly look into this matter and allow same, if consistent, as this is getting to be quite an important office?

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Member of Congress, Thirteenth District of Texas.

Can any man with a gentleman's instincts and feelings feel other than outraged at the wrong done him? Why was his name lugged in here? It is done to divert attention from the demand for investigation. Turn to page 55 of this document. Under the case of Union Springs I find a letter by my honorable and distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]. I will read it:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1904.

Hon. G. W. BEAVERS, Chief, etc.

SIR: I respectfully ask that the post-office at Union Springs, Ala., remain where it is—where the patrons wish it to remain. The owner, Dr. Seale Harris, will make all necessary repairs.

Yours, truly,

H. D. CLAYTON.

This letter caused his name to be embodied in the list of persons who are mentioned in connection with the Post-Office Department scandals. It was an injustice to him, I submit; such a wrong as would shock the sense of justice of a Hottentot fresh from the jungles.

Why was this done? Can you doubt that it was for the purpose of diverting attention from men who have committed crime in the Post-Office Department and dread its further investigation?

Take the cases of increase of rent at Georgetown and Lockhart, referred to day before yesterday by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], where new buildings had been erected, and hence new leases a necessity. It was impossible that either could come within the class of cases mentioned by General Bristow or asked for in the letter of the chairman of the Post-Office Committee. Yet they are thrust into this list. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], whose name is mentioned in this document, has said that he does not object to it; that there is nothing in it he would change. He treats it as rather complimentary that he should have been mentioned.

Permit me to show you how it is being handled by the press of this country; and regardless of the opinion one may entertain of the reliability of the press, it is undeniable that the newspaper is an important factor in shaping public opinion, especially with reference to public men. Let us see what they are saying.

One paper, ordinarily fair, treats this matter under this headline:

Rank spoils system—How it operated under the régime of Beavers—Just to oblige Congressmen.

Under this headline is carried the name of every Member and Senator mentioned in this report.

Another paper states that certain Members were "taken red-handed with loot."

And a miserable yellow journal in New York treats the report under this heading: "'Graft' from Beavers for Congressmen."

The gentleman from Iowa may be able to salve his conscience with the thought that this does not hurt him; but there are others who resent it, who feel outraged that their names should have been improperly and unjustly connected with this scandal.

As I stated in the beginning, some one is responsible for this document, and its preparation was for a purpose. Now, gentlemen of the opposition, knowing who is responsible and knowing the purpose, I ask, will you interpose parliamentary objections, and thereby enable this very smooth individual to throttle all investigation of his Department, thereby accomplishing his purpose? Has the political situation become so desperate that, notwithstanding an imputation has been unjustly cast on more than 100 Members of this body, you will not permit a full investigation of this rotten Department?

Gentlemen, I say it was fear that threw this document before this body. That is what it was. What was the purpose? To involve the names of Members on both sides of this Chamber in this scandalous transaction, and thereby intimidate them from moving further in the direction that the public and the newspapers of the country are demanding. Are you going to be intimidated?

Every honest man whose name is in that document, in my humble opinion, when this matter is brought to an issue will vote not merely for an investigation of the connection of Members with the Post-Office Department, but also for a resolution providing for a broad and comprehensive investigation of the entire Post-Office Department, to the end that whoever has committed wrong may be brought to book. [Applause.] This action, and nothing short of this, is what the honest man wants. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, not for the purpose of lodging any complaint against anybody so far as I am personally concerned, but for the purpose of having my remarks published in the greatest American daily newspaper, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I desire to submit, in perfect good humor, a few remarks on this auspicious occasion. [Laughter.]

In the language of my distinguished friend, who formerly served here with us as an eminent member of this now discredited House, Governor Lanham, of Texas, a great man, and the governor of what in many respects is the greatest State in the Union——

A MEMBER. Except New York.

Mr. CLAYTON. The greatest State in every respect except Alabama. I do not make any other exception. I propose to submit, in the language of an old-fashioned and not highly lettered constituent of Governor Lanham, "a few incongruvial remarks." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no occasion for any innocent man here to become angry at anybody. [Laughter.] As you observe, I am not at all angry. This report has not told a single lie on me. If there is any insinuation in it of any improper conduct on my part, I will resent it if anybody will call my attention to it. The only thing that I can have the right to complain of is that this report has not told the whole truth about the only matter in which my name is mentioned. Now, it not having told the whole truth, the author of this document, whoever he may be, was guilty of what the moral philosophers call suppressio veri—one way of intentionally doing wrong to an honorable man.

I am not going to weary the House by reading at length all the documents I have in my hand, but I shall read some of them and insert all of them in the RECORD. Members do not generally care to hear documents read at length. In this so-called report now under consideration there is a letter from the Postmaster-General addressed to Mr. OVERSTREET, in the following language:

Further replying to your communication of January 25, 1904, I have the honor to transmit herewith an abstract of the files of the division of salaries and allowances, concerning leases of premises for post-offices and allowances for rent, fuel, and light at post-offices where Members of Congress have made any recommendation in connection therewith.

H. C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General.

Now, on page 3 of this report the committee of this House says:

In a very limited number of leases, three in all, where the property was owned by Members of the House, it appears that the Government was itself desirous of securing the property for post-office purposes, and that the rental was entirely satisfactory to the Government, and that in each case the original lease of the building for post-office purposes was made at a time when the owner of the building was not a Member of the House.

Mr. Bristow, in his letter to the committee, under date of January 25, 1904, says, and the committee quotes it with approval:

In none of the above cases does it appear that the Government has paid an excessive rental. I referred to these cases in my report not because there was any fraud indicated in the business transactions, but solely because such contracts appeared to be in violation of the statute above mentioned.

Now, that is the finding of your committee in the matter of leases or rentals of buildings for post-office purposes. It is unnecessary for me to say more, but I desire to tell about my indorsement of a petition signed by all the people—business people—in the town of Union Springs, Ala.

Now, mark you, your committee has already found that in no case—barring three—has any Member of this House, in connection with the rent or lease of any building, been guilty of any violation of law or offended against any rule of propriety or even nicety, if you please. And in the three cases to which reference is made where Members were owners of the buildings they were owners of the buildings before their election to this House. One of these cases was in New York, one in Connecticut, and the third in Kansas. None of them was in Alabama or in any States other than the three mentioned. So far as the Members of this House from the States of this Union—including Alabama—are concerned in the matter of the rental or lease of post-offices, your committee has already found and formally reported that no Member was or is in any wise censurable for so much as even any strained breach of propriety, to say nothing of any violation of law.

This being the finding of your committee, and notwithstanding that fact, for some mysterious purpose—I do not know for what—I find appended to this report reference to the lease of the post-office building in that splendid little town of Union Springs, Ala., a town that can justly boast of a most intelligent, virtuous, and law-abiding population—people who love and respect the law, both human and divine—a flourishing community of the best sort of people, and who have on the floor of this House to-day what many of them think the best Representative obtainable in the whole United States.

I know how good they are. And I appreciate most highly their often-repeated confidence in me by uniting with the thousands of other good people in that district in sending me to Congress for several terms.

A MEMBER. Then you admit that your people have a most excellent Congressman? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; I would admit it and say so, if I were not too modest. [Laughter.]

Now, let me refer to this report. It says:

At Union Springs, Ala., in 1902, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,500, the allowances were for rent $200, and for heat and light $34. An inspector reported that the premises occupied were unsatisfactory, and steps were taken with a view to securing more desirable quarters. While the question was pending, Dr. Seale Harris purchased the premises then occupied, and stated that he would renovate the same for $300 rent.

And this document further says:

On March 5, 1902, Doctor Harris submitted a proposal for the same room for a ten-year lease at $300 per annum, to include equipment, heat, and light.

Then this document proceeds to set out a letter from United States Senator PETTUS, of Alabama, a great and grand old man, against whom no slanderer has ever dared to utter a breath of scandal—this fine old gentleman, whose honored head to-day is crowned by the sunlight of three-quarters of a century, and who lives in the confidence and affection of his people. The letter that he wrote indorsing a petition of the citizens of Union Springs is set out in the report, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1903.

Hon. G. W. BEAVERS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Some time ago I wrote the Department relative to the lease of the post-office at Union Springs, Ala., by Dr. Seale Harris. I have had several letters in regard to the matter from parties interested. Every business and professional man in the place has petitioned you to let the office remain where it is at present and where it has been located for many years.

The owner has submitted you a bid and specifications for additions and repairs which will make the building nearly double the present size and improve it every way; in fact, he submitted these plans to the postmaster and he approved them. Doctor Harris is one of my strongest friends in this section, and I am deeply interested in the matter. Besides, I think the wishes of the citizens, as shown in the petition sent the Department, ought to be considered. Believe me,

Very respectfully,
E. W. PETTUS.

And then the report sets out the following indorsement of the petition of the citizens of Union Springs:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1903.

Hon. G. W. BEAVERS, Chief, etc.

SIR: I respectfully ask that the post-office at Union Springs, Ala., remain where it is, where the patrons wish it to remain. The owner, Doctor Harris, will make all necessary repairs.

Yours, truly,
H. D. CLAYTON.

And then follows the second letter of Senator PETTUS, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1904.

Hon. HENRY C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

DEAR SIR: Dr. Seale Harris, of Union Springs, Ala., has filed an application to be allowed to make certain improvements on the post-office building at that place, and has also filed a petition signed practically by all of the people of Union Springs, requesting that his application be granted.

This improvement will be of benefit and convenience to the office, and as the people there generally want it I would be very glad if you will have the matter referred to the proper authority in your Department with a view of having it allowed.

Very respectfully,
E. W. PETTUS.

And then follows the letter from that great commoner of the great State of Georgia, lovingly called down in Georgia "STEVE" CLAY, an honest, typical, and sensible Georgia cracker [applause], whose every heart beat is for honesty and for high and intelligent purposes, and to whom the people of my district and State frequently appeal to represent them in post-office business, because the State of Alabama has no representative on the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that committee of which the Georgia Senator is a member and whose subcommittee has jurisdiction of the Alabama cases which go to the Senate. Here is the letter of Senator CLAY set out in this report:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1903.

Hon. R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: There is on file at the Post-Office Department a petition from every business and professional man in Union Springs, Ala., requesting the Department to re-lease the present post-office building. Senator PETTUS and Hon. H. D. CLAYTON, in whose district the office is located, have indorsed this petition and have written the Department asking that the petition be acted upon favorably, and I concur with them in their indorsement.

Respectfully,
A. S. CLAY.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama ten minutes further.

Mr. CLAYTON. And then this document or post-office report concludes with the following statement:

March 17, 1903, Dr. Harris's proposal at $300 was accepted, and letters were written to Senators PETTUS and CLAY and Representative CLAYTON, as follows:

MARCH 17, 1903.

SIR: Referring to the matter of leasing the post-office premises at Union Springs, Ala., I beg to advise you that the proposition of Dr. Seale Harris to fit up present premises for use of the post-office at that place has been accepted.

Very respectfully,
ACTING ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

This is the case of Union Springs, Ala., from which, however, the author of this document was careful to omit, for some unfair purpose doubtless, the petition of the people referred to in the letters and on file in the Department. Now, I here read into the RECORD the copy of this petition transmitted to me by the Post-Office Department, including all the names of the signers of the petition:

Petition of the citizens of Union Springs, Ala., in regard to post-office.

Whereas the building now occupied by the post-office in Union Springs is located directly in the business center of the city, being midway between the city hall and the county court-house, therefore situated most conveniently for all the business men in the city, and having heard no complaint at any time against the location of the post-office building; and

Whereas Dr. Seale Harris, the owner of said building, agrees to remodel and practically rebuild same; to increase the size of said building by more than 200 square feet; to purchase the desired equipment necessary for facilitating the rapid handling of the mails, and to otherwise make improvements in the construction and equipment of said building, which will greatly add to the comfort and convenience thereof; and since such improvements will entail considerable expense to the owner of said building;

We, the undersigned citizens, business and professional men, of Union Springs, Ala., respectfully request the Post-Office Department to continue the post-office in its present quarters, and we further request that the rental of said post-office building be raised sufficiently to warrant the said Dr. Seale Harris in making the necessary improvements above mentioned.

This petition was filed with the post-office inspector January 19, 1903, and filed in the Post-Office Department January 26, 1903.

Now, here is a letter received from the Post-Office Department yesterday, which shows conclusively the legality and propriety of the lease of the Union Springs post-office. This is the letter:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1904.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your request for a statement of the allowance for rent at Union Springs, Ala., I beg to state that the premises occupied by the post-office are under a lease to the Department for a term of ten years, from May 1, 1903.

The lease covers a room 19 feet by 45 feet, complete equipment, heat, and light. At the time the proposition was accepted the office was entitled to an allowance of $300 for rent, fuel, and light, as a maximum under the scale adopted by the Department for making allowances for rent, fuel, and light for third-class post-offices. Since the lease was entered into, the business of the office has increased, and the office is now entitled to an allowance, as a maximum, of $331 for rent, fuel, and light under this scale.

Very respectfully,

R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

It will be observed that this petition states that the people of the town desired the post-office retained in its then present locality and that the owner would repair it, in order to meet the requirements of the case, and these people suggested that the rental of the office ought to be a sufficient amount to justify those repairs. Now, that is the petition which this letter of mine indorses, and that is all I have had to do with this case. It was a very respectful and sensible petition, and is signed by the probate judge, by the mayor, the city clerk, every doctor, every merchant, and every business man, and in short, so far as I know and believe—and I think I know ninety-nine out of every hundred of these men personally—it is signed by every patron of that office.

It was clearly my duty to indorse this petition, and I shall continue to indorse the petitions of those good and honest people who send me here to Washington for that purpose, as well as for other public purposes, and it was entirely proper and the duty of the Senators to also indorse this petition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this report uncovers any rascality or improper transaction by any Member of Congress it does not do so in the case of any Member of this side of the Chamber.

I have taken the pains to go through this document to see if any Democrat had even so much as offended against the law or propriety, and I have found none in the matter of post-office leases. As I have said, the report of your committee, made unanimously by Republicans and Democrats, says that there has been no infraction of law, no possible impropriety committed, except possibly in the three cases, one each in New York, Connecticut, and Kansas.

Mr. Speaker, what is all this document for? I think I can tell you. When the newspaper reporters—and all of them that I know are fair-minded, bright, and interesting men; some of them may sometimes for the sake of making a good story indulge in a little overornamentation, but all of them that I know are truthful, honorable, and gentlemanly—when this class of public servants—because they do serve the public in a high capacity, representing a noble calling—when these industrious young men heard of the Tulloch charges some months ago it was reported in the newspapers that they went to the distinguished perturbed, mentally disturbed, and incompetent person at the head of the Post-Office Department and asked him about the Tulloch charges, and ever since this man has been careful to resent the idea that Congress should investigate the Post-Office Department.

From that Department have come interviews in the public press saying, in effect, that Congressional investigation was unnecessary. I think this document is a part of an attempt to intimidate Congress, so that there will be no further investigation of that Department, but to have the investigation limited to the acts of Congressmen and Senators, to the end that an unnecessary and foolish investigation of these honorable men may be had and the further investigation of the thieves and rascals now in the Post-Office Department may be prevented. You will doubtless recollect it was reported that this man at the head of the Post-Office Department said to the newspaper reporters when they went to him for information about the Tulloch charges and in reply to questions: "In reference to the Tulloch charges, just say that when the Postmaster-General was asked about them the Postmaster-General laughed."

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. "Just laughed."

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, later on, when these enterprising public servants were not content with the horselaugh of that distinguished individual they again asked him, and pressed it upon him, "What about the Tulloch charges of great corruption and dishonesty in the Post-Office Department," this man is reported to have said in reply "the Tulloch charges are all hot air." And yet this man of horselaughter, and perhaps of infinite jest, is engaged, I believe, with others, in an effort to prevent a Congressional investigation of the Post-Office Department. The truth is that this man and the others in authority ignored the Tulloch charges until the newspapers had so agitated the matter before the public that an investigation was forced upon the Post-Office Department.

This investigation was had, not originally by the efforts of Mr. Payne or of Mr. Roosevelt, but it was forced by the public press of the country, which demanded that the doors of the Post-Office Department be thrown open, that the blinds be torn down, that the curtains be cast aside, that the sashes in the windows be thrown up in order that the sunlight of truth and the fresh air of decency be turned in upon a corrupt Post-Office Department. [Applause.] Yet Mr. Hot-Air Man or this Mr. Horselaughter Man is publicly congratulated by the President of the United States for the distinguished services that by a violent stretch of the imagination he is supposed to have rendered the country in the conviction of Machen and his confederates. [Laughter and applause.]

Ah, gentlemen of the Republican side! Why do you seek to modify the Hay resolution, and why will you content yourselves with adopting a resolution reading, in effect, that we will appoint a special committee to investigate charges against Members of Congress and nobody else?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Give me five minutes more.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I can yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yield me five; I have hardly started.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I can yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, I should like to deliver a sermon on the text, "Turn on the lights and turn the rascals out." With the limited time, I will do the best I can. Now, you Republican gentlemen propose to adopt a modified resolution. The newspapers told us last night and this morning that the President sent for our estimable friend, the gentleman from Indiana, JESSE OVERSTREET, to go up to the White House yesterday, and that he sent for the Speaker to do likewise, and that the President was alarmed over the situation and indignation in the House of Representatives, and he seems to have gotten you all together, and you are going to adopt a miserable little resolution, limiting the inquiry to Members of the House.

What will the country say? I think I know. I believe the public will say that there was and is a whole lot of venality, corruption, and fraud yet under cover in the Post-Office Department, but that because we are now on the eve of a Presidential campaign the Republican party contented itself by adopting a little whitewashing resolution. [Laughter and applause.] Now, that is the gist of it, as the lawyers would say. Rhetoricians would say that that is the heart or purpose of your resolution. I want to rip the whole stomach of the Post-Office Department open and show the corruption still covered up, as I believe, in the very vitals of that great Department. Now, will you vote down a resolution for that purpose? You have indulged in indignation and you have fulminated. Do all you Republicans wear collars of the dog-collar kind?

Mr. JAMES. And "stand pat."

Mr. CLAYTON. Do you stand pat on these charges? [Laughter.] I do not believe that there are more honest men than the Republican Members from the State of Indiana, for instance, that I see before me. I appeal to them and to all like them to vote for the fullest investigation. Can it be that the White House will influence you? Can a dog collar be put around your neck to pull you away from your duty? I appeal to you to turn on the lights and turn the rascals out. [Great applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIRDSALL].

Mr. BIRDSALL. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in the report now under consideration by this House. I find, however, that the name of my predecessor, David B. Henderson, as honorable and upright a man as ever sat in this or any other Congress in the world, is mentioned in connection with the allowance of clerk hire at the office of Clarion, my own home. The man who was postmaster at the time complained of was J. C. Harwood, also my lifelong personal friend, and whatever inference of wrong may be drawn from the report of the transaction reflects upon him as well as Mr. Henderson. Mr. Harwood is now dead, and mourned by a community whom he had served faithfully and well as postmaster for sixteen years. It is due to his memory that the facts be stated fully and fairly. Hon. David B. Henderson voluntarily retired from public life and surrendered an exalted station therein, which he was peculiarly fitted by nature and education to grace and adorn. It is due to him that even the inference of wrong and the suspicion of evil should be dissipated within these walls, where for twenty years he was beloved and honored, and I certainly take pleasure in doing for him what his great heart would have prompted him to do for the least of mankind in the interest of justice. The injustice of this report comes in the fact that the material evidence bearing on the transaction is not published.

CLARION, IOWA.

On December 7, 1900, the allowance for separating clerk hire at this office was reduced from $240 to $120, the latter amount being based on a report of transit mail handled, made by postmaster on December 1, 1900.

On January 13, 1903, Hon. D. B. Henderson requested that the allowance be increased to $360 per annum.

On January 15, 1903, the allowance was increased to $360 per annum, but there is no report of the separating business on which to base such an allowance.

On June 29, 1903, on the basis of a report made by the Railway Mail Service, the allowance was reduced to $50, effective August 1, 1903, that being the maximum amount he was entitled to for the work then being done.

On August 8, 1903, on the recommendation of an assistant superintendent of the salary and allowance division, the allowance of $50 was discontinued, effective August 1, 1903.

This report carries the inference that the clerk hire was increased solely on Mr. Henderson's recommendation in January, 1903, from $120 to $360 per annum, and that in July, 1903, the entire allowance was cut off on the report of an inspector.

Now, what are the facts? In January, 1903, Mr. Harwood wrote to Mr. Henderson the following letter:

CLARION, IOWA, January 10, 1903.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Your letter relative to discontinuance of Florence post-office received several days ago and would have been answered before but for the fact I have been very busy.

Through inquiry of persons in that vicinity I learn that all patrons of the Florence office can be served by the rural free-delivery system, either from Eagle Grove or this place; hence I think it would be better if the office was discontinued, for it is only a nuisance to the postmaster and of no particular value to the public, for most people in that section are served by the rural carriers.

Colonel, if it is not imposing too much on your time and good nature, I would like a favor at your hands. Some two years and a half ago you secured me an allowance of $30 per month clerk hire. A year ago last November the Department cut the same to $10 per month, and it has so remained since.

In order to show you that the business of the office is steadily increasing, I give you the gross receipts for the past five years: 1898, $3,597.35; 1899, $3,958.44; 1900, $4,065.42; 1901, $4,557.54; 1902, $5,472.29.

As matters are, and have been for more than a year, I am compelled to pay $30 per month out of my own pocket for clerk hire. Last year the Government received from the office $3,560.96 net, and simple justice, it seems to me, entitles me to an increase in clerk hire.

Another reason why it should be increased is that commencing with next month four additional mail trains will be added on the Chicago and Great Western, with this as the end of a division. Both mean a large amount of additional work, and I am doubtful if one clerk and myself will be able to serve the public promptly, for in addition to handling mails we do a large money-order and registry business. In 1902 I issued 5,200 money orders and registered 967 letters and parcels. In addition to above considerations it takes fully one-third of one man's time to wait upon rural patrons who call for their mail after the carriers leave. I dislike to trouble you, Colonel, at the same time I think the clerk hire of the office should at least be raised to $30 per month.

Hurriedly and sincerely, J. C. HARWOOD.

This letter was referred to the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and with it went the following communication from Mr. Henderson:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 13, 1903.

Hon. R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I hand you herewith a letter from Mr. J. C. Harwood, postmaster at Clarion, Wright County, Iowa, one of the prominent and most reliable men in my district and one of the most intelligent and efficient postmasters that I have. I call attention to his suggestions in regard to an increase in the allowance for clerk hire in the Clarion post-office, and I can not too strongly urge his views upon your favorable consideration. I do hope that you can give him the $30 per month allowance which he requests. Clarion is a growing city, and the postal service is enlarged, especially as the result of rural free delivery and also the running of additional trains on the Great Western road.

Very truly, yours, D. B. HENDERSON.

On January 15, 1903, the following communication was sent to Mr. Henderson by the First Assistant Postmaster-General:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 15, 1903.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your esteemed favor of the 13th instant, I am pleased to advise you that in accordance with your recommendation the allowance for clerk hire at Clarion, Iowa, has been increased from $120 to $360 per annum, to take effect January 1, 1903, and the postmaster has been so advised.

Very respectfully,

First Assistant Postmaster-General.

These letters indicate clearly that the allowance was made and based upon the statement of the postmaster, Mr. Harwood, with reference to the business of the Clarion post-office, which statement could be easily verified in the records of the Department by the Assistant Postmaster-General. The letters upon their face repel the suggestion, inference, and thought that the increase was asked by reason of any political influence or for that purpose, and it must be borne in mind that at this time Mr. Henderson had signified his intention to retire from public life. There is nothing in the transaction thus far, then, that casts any reflection whatever either upon Mr. Henderson, Mr. Harwood, or upon the Department. In June, 1903, Postmaster Harwood died, and, pending the appointment of a new postmaster, his son, Burt Harwood, was acting postmaster. Mr. Harwood had had in his employ as deputy or clerk one Robert Osier, who had been with him for five or six years, a thoroughly competent, active, and energetic man. He had been receiving $40 a month, $30 of which had been paid, as shown by Mr. Harwood's letter, out of the postmaster's own pocket.

I recommended Mr. Robert Osier to fill the place made vacant by Mr. Harwood's death. Pending his appointment it seems that an inspector was sent to Clarion, as usual, I believe, in cases where there is a change of postmasters in offices of this size. While he was at Clarion, according to his report to the Department, he had a conversation with Mr. Osier, in which he was told by the latter that he would be satisfied to conduct the office with the regular compensation, which is $1,700 per annum. I know from my own personal knowledge that after Mr. Osier's appointment he employed a clerk at $40 a month, and that he is paying such clerk out of his own salary. The report as made carried the inference that the increase of clerk hire made in January, 1903, was solely at the recommendation of Mr. Henderson, and that it was reduced upon the report of an inspector made in June or July, 1903, whereas the truth is that the reduction was made because of the willingness of the new postmaster to assume the duties of the office and pay for clerk hire (which, in fact, ought to be paid by the Government) out of his own salary.

With these facts upon the record, there forms not a suspicion of wrongdoing either upon the part of Mr. Henderson or Mr. Harwood. The following quotation from the report of the inspector will bear out the truth of the foregoing statement:

The office is now working under an acting postmaster, but the present efficient clerk has been appointed postmaster, and he says he is well satisfied to conduct the office for the regular compensation, which is $1,700 per annum. I would therefore recommend that the allowance of $360 be canceled as well as the $50 recently allowed upon the showing of the Railway Mail Service and as mentioned in your communication of July 10.

It is perfectly apparent that a rank injustice is being done by the Post-Office Department to the present postmaster at Clarion. I myself have some doubt whether he ever made such a statement as is credited to him by the inspector, but if in his anxiety to become postmaster he assumed to accept the office and pay for all his clerk hire out of his salary, it was and is, nevertheless, an injustice and a wrong for the Department to permit it to be done.

I can not understand why the author of this report, with this evidence available in the Post-Office Department, did not set out the true facts upon which the action was taken in the Clarion office. It is more the subject of condemnation when, as in this case, the Member upon whom the aspersions are cast has left the Halls of Congress and has no opportunity to come here and defend himself. It is more the subject of condemnation when the postmaster upon whom suspicion has been cast has passed beyond this vale of tears. I knew J. C. Harwood personally for thirty years. A more upright, honorable, conscientious man never lived. Mr. Henderson needs no defense. His name and fame are enshrined not only in the hearts of the people of his district and of the State of Iowa, but in the hearts of the entire nation. A man of absolute integrity, of high ideals of public life and of absolute loyalty to his conception of them. I have little fear that his record can be tarnished or even suspicion cast upon it by some overzealous satrap in one of the Executive Departments of this Government.

This statement will entirely dissipate any suspicion or charge of wrongdoing against Mr. Henderson.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, whenever a man is charged with crime and convicted and is brought to the bar of justice, he is always politely asked by the judge if he has anything to say why the sentence of the law should not be imposed upon him. That little privilege has not been accorded the Members of this House, and I am allowed the enormous sum of five minutes to attempt to vindicate myself, a Representative on this floor charged with high crimes and misdemeanors, and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we may stay here until doomsday abusing officers in the Executive Departments of this Government and we will not satisfy the people. The question was very fairly presented to me this morning, when a distinguished citizen of this country came to my committee room to-day, a man whom I never saw in my life before, yet he took in the situation and presented the picture fairly to me.

He said: "The people think not only the Post-Office Department is rotten, but that Congress is rotten; they are so charged by the administrative officers of this Government to-day." He said: "First, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General charges Congress with corruption. He takes it to the Postmaster-General, and he stamps it with his approval; and then he takes it to the President of the United States, and the President of the United States puts his approval on it." And he said: "You gentlemen are up there day by day trying to deny the charges that the President of the United States has approved against you, and you will never satisfy the people." Now, I am in favor of an investigation. [Applause.] When I came here I promised my people whom I talked with on this subject I would favor an investigation, and I am in favor of an investigation now. I do not care who it hits, how deep it goes, or where it reaches. [Applause.] If I am unfit to stand upon this floor and represent my people, they ought to know it and we ought to be turned out, and I am not afraid of having the searchlight turned on anything I have done in daylight or darkness.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say to-day briefly and hurriedly that the President of the United States owes it to the Congress of the United States to remove that man Bristow from office before the sun goes down [applause] in vindication of the Members of this House whom he has basely assailed and charged as criminals when there is not an iota of crime charged against a single man in that bill of details that has been furnished to this House. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but unless this is done we can never satisfy the people whom we represent. I have nothing against Mr. Bristow. I never was able to look that man in the face in my life, and if there is a man within the sound of my voice who wants to jeopardize his standing by saying that he could look him in the face I will give him time to get up and say so. [Applause.] They undertake to charge in that report that we have been dealing with Mr. Beavers. I never talked with Mr. Beavers in my life. It took me just exactly nine months from the day I started in, if you will look at the record, to get light and fuel increase of $4, and I finally got rent increased, in one of the cases they charged me with, $100. We got $250 for the rent that the post-office inspector who was sent there at my request said was worth $300.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD].

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I speak so slowly that I shall not be able to say in five minutes what is due to my portion of this record. Before I say anything on my own account, I desire to say a word for my colleague and friend [Mr. BOWERSOCK] from Kansas, who is at home and unable to speak for himself. His name appears in the report presented by the committee concerning a lease of a post-office at his own town of Lawrence.

The brief report that is here shows that the office was located in his building, and had been for thirty years; that at the time the renewal of the lease was called for he was invited to the Department himself, and after that time the lease was renewed in the name of his daughter, Mrs. Hill. The only line of explanation given in this report is that no record of a change of title appears. I only want to say for him that no record that can be made in that Department will impeach his integrity or honor at home or anywhere else. Nothing said about him by the officers of the Department, or any other officer, can stain his honor among the people who know him at home.

If he transferred that property to his daughter, he did it in entire good faith and for an ample consideration. He is a man of wealth in his own town, owns numerous pieces of property, and it would be an easy matter for him, in perfectly good faith, to transfer the property to any member of his own family. The Department made no objection to it; he transferred it in good faith, and I have no doubt if it is necessary at any time he can make a proper explanation.

Concerning myself, all that is presented here in this record is true. I asked for an increase of rent of post-offices. I have asked for an increase of clerk hire for different post-offices in my district, and I was right about it. Whenever the same occasion arises I will ask again at the same Department.

I understand the law to be, and have always understood it to be, that it is within the discretion of the Postmaster-General to assign the amount to each of these third and fourth class offices that is necessary for clerk hire. They have adopted a rule in the Department for a regulation of the Department by which they apportion the amount given by Congress for this service upon the transit of mail that passes through the office, but that is only a rule or regulation of the Department. It is only adopted for the purpose of securing a fair distribution of the funds. There is no violation of the law in it when any Member of Congress presents himself to the Department to explain the condition that requires additional clerk hire at any third or fourth class office.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. One more subject I desire to mention. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in his first report presented to the President of the United States cited a case of my own, an application for an increase of rent at Manhattan. He gave a half a page of moral philosophy on the character of Beavers, and then presented me by name as having applied to Beavers to obtain from him as a favor an increase of that rent.

This report now presented to the House shows that that increase was allowed by the First Assistant Postmaster-General and not by Beavers. I never made any application to Beavers for that purpose. I never was friendly enough with him to ask him for anything I could avoid asking him for. The First Assistant himself made the order for increase, and he made it in accordance with the practice of the Department for forty years, upon showing all the facts under which the original lease was obtained. He had no doubt about his power to make it, and his letter was attached to the lease for the purpose of increasing the amount of rent.

They paid it for nearly a year upon that contract, and then, after this report was made, on the 26th of January, the attorney-general of that Department advised the First Assistant that he had no power to change a lease in that way, and therefore he must cancel that increased allowance. For the first time since his office was created the First Assistant discovered that he had no power to change the terms of a lease that had been made and signed, whether it was right or wrong. I have that case still pending before the Department. I intend to show the Department the injustice they are working to the owner of that building, and unless it is increased I will advise the owner to not further furnish the supplies required by it, and settle the case in the courts. There is no question of wrong conduct in it, and yet upon that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and the President of the United States have certified to the world that I violated the law. They shall not do it without my protest here or anywhere else. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Upon that statement, certified and approved by the President, I was entitled to the floor on a question of privilege immediately after that was made. I did not seek it then because the Fourth Assistant was absent, and the information I thought necessary could not be directly obtained from him. Since that time this matter has been in the hands of the Post-Office Committee in this House, and I was entirely willing to await a proper opportunity under their report.

The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General represented to the President that I had made a corrupt contract with Mr. Beavers. The attorneys, Conrad and Bonaparte, appointed by the President to review the report of Mr. Bristow, speak of this case, and, evidently misled by Mr. Bristow's report, say that instead of obtaining this increase in this way I ought to have prevented it.

They understood Mr. Bristow to report me as obtaining this as a favor from Beavers. I did not obtain it from him. This present report shows that it was the action of the First Assistant, whose duty it has always been to act on such cases. But Mr. Bristow's report is the report which the President has approved and sent to the country with the charge against me.

How much it affects me at home amounts to nothing. No man in the entire district or in the State where I live believed I was wrong or paid any attention to it. Since that time my people have testified to this by my renomination without a voice against me, for the fifth time in the same district. But I submit that, with all the sincerity of the President, and it is great; with all his earnestness and honesty, and they are great, I can not approve of a course which involves this reckless manner of mixing the character and good name of honest men with the character of criminals whom he is prosecuting. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, upon this subject I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I ask permission of the House to do so.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks the same privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask the same privilege for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER.]

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I have long maintained that each State should have a Department officer here in Washington to attend to much of the Department work that now devolves upon the Representatives. It would relieve them from much responsibility and would leave them free to attend to their legislative duties. But as there are no such officers charged with this important work, it remains for Representatives to receive communications and requests from their constituents and, where necessary, present them to the constituted officers of the Government, with such indorsement of approval or disapproval as in their judgment may seem right. I have never hesitated to do this. Therefore, as to the matter in which I am interested here and in which I have been pilloried in this report, I have no apologies to make. I could not have done differently if I would. The letters that I have written require no explanation. I shall make none; and, if opportunity requires, shall do the same thing over again. The only indictment that could stand against me would be that which my constituents might very properly make in case of my failure to properly represent them at the Departments, as well as upon the floor of this House.

I do not care to extend my remarks in the RECORD, but leave the matter right here. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Before yielding to the next gentleman, I I wish to state that in the publication of the report brought in by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads there was inadvertently omitted a letter which I had addressed to the Postmaster-General, under date of January 23, which I ask the Clerk to read. It relates to this same subject-matter and should accompany the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1904.

Hon. HENRY C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: During the hearing before this committee recently the statement was made by Mr. Waters that from about 900 offices allowances for separating purposes had been taken away because the offices were not entitled to them. From a conversation had with Mr. Waters over the telephone it was understood that a statement had been made to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in regard to these disallowances, and that a copy of this statement could probably be furnished without much difficulty.

I would be pleased to have you furnish me for use of the committee a copy of the statement referred to at the earliest opportunity. The committee desires to know what offices have been affected by these disallowances, what the allowance was before any reduction or discontinuance was made, and what it is now, and also the compensation allowed postmasters at each of the offices in question. It may be that all of this information is not easily obtainable without considerable delay; and if so, please advise me immediately. But in any event the committee desires to have such information as is now accessible as soon as possible.

Very respectfully,
JESSE OVERSTREET,
Chairman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY].

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the report of the committee does me a manifest injustice. I find my name in that report. I am credited with getting an increase of rental in my home city from $970 to $1,200. The report does not state the reason why that increase was made—an increase which I think was entirely proper, and I believe I could convince any reasonable man that the increase should have been made. I am credited also with having in one instance secured an allowance for clerical hire in the Emlenton post-office.

I believe the report prejudices me with my constituency and places me in a false and improper attitude. I think the report is incorrect. I have a distinct recollection of having been instrumental in securing an increased rental for more than one building. And I know that I have been in securing, at least have recommended, more than two score increases in clerical hire.

I regret that my constituency will read this and will think I have been derelict in my duties. If I properly conceive my duty as a Representative in Congress, then, wherever the interests of my constituency are affected, it is my plain duty to act as their representative before the Executive Departments to present their claims and to see that, so far as my recommendation will go, justice be done them.

I have been to the Pension Office, and I think I have made more than 3,000, possibly more than 5,000, recommendations for new pensions or for increase in pensions previously granted.

Rising above any personal effect this report may have upon individuals is the question what are the rights, privileges, prerogatives, and duties of a Representative in Congress? The time has come when there should be a distinct declaration as to where our duties or rights begin and where they leave off.

I think there is not a Member of this House that has ever gone into an Executive Department and preferred a request where the interests of his constituents were involved, where their rights were being infringed, who has not demanded, "If it be consistent with the law and the good of the service, then I ask that the Department may take the action asked." Therefore I fear that in this report my constituents will think I have been derelict and unmindful of their interests in that I have secured but one increase in clerical allowance and but one increase in rentals of buildings. I have secured upon my recommendations a large number of both. I hope to secure many more when justice shall demand such increase. [Loud applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT].

[Mr. BURKETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee proceed.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I have the distinction, although I did not covet it, of having been mentioned twice in this report by the Postmaster-General, or by some one in his Department, concerning Representatives and Senators in Congress. So far as I am individually concerned, I have no criticism to make of any statement made in this report nor any apology to offer either to this House or to my constituency. My objections are rather to the facts and parts of the record which have been suppressed, either deliberately or ignorantly. I object because this report purports to be based upon an investigation made under the same general authority as that which attempted in part to ferret out the grafters and the thieves in this Department, and because of the inference attempted to be impressed upon the country that the membership of this House are in the same category.

I object because this is the first time in my public career that any man has attempted, either directly or by innuendo, to besmirch my character in connection with any public service. I object because I do not concede the right to Mr. Henry C. Payne, the Postmaster-General, or any of his subordinates, to send into this body an unjust and inferential accusation against its membership. I object because any statement, by innuendo or otherwise, that I have in the discharge of my public duties in connection with the Post-Office Department violated any law or committed any moral wrong is absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

Therefore I deem it due to myself and to this body that I should rise in my place and resent any imputation of wrong, and, in my humble judgment, the dignity of the House demands that each Member whose name has been mentioned in this report should similarly resent the imputation and demand the closest scrutiny and investigation.

I wish to say here that there is not a word or a line in this report or in the entire record, so far as concerns myself, which reflects upon my integrity as a Representative or as a man and which I would not be willing should be read by every citizen in my district. And yet, as illustrating how dangerous is the gossip monger and slanderer, some reputable newspapers both in and out of my State have suggested as to various Members that there must have been some wrongdoing or else they would not be so indignant or sensitive. Yet the contrary conclusion might and ought to have been stated.

A Representative occupies a peculiar position of trust and confidence. While actively engaged in the discharge of his public duties he is far removed from his constituents. They learn of his work only as the results are published in the press or appear in the RECORD. If the confidence of his constituency in his integrity should be impaired, to the same or greater extent would his usefulness be lessened. Why, then, should Members not be sensitive when their good name and reputation have been assailed in a report by some official of a coordinate department entitled "Charges concerning Members of Congress?" It is true that the reputable press of the country will soon discover the truth and will exonerate those who should be acquitted, but perhaps there may be newspapers which are not so careful, and there may be individuals not so just as to wish to distinguish between truth and falsehood.

Mr. Speaker, this is a great Government. We have been creating new Executive Departments and adding to their powers for more than a hundred years. Not only have we Departments covering our finances, our foreign relations, our Army and Navy, the administration of justice, matters concerning our public lands and other interior subjects, and the distribution of our mails, but our agricultural interests have developed a great Department, and we have recently extended a more complete and effective jurisdiction in the interest of the development of our manufactures and of labor and our foreign and domestic commerce. No one of these Departments comes nearer to every citizen of the Republic than the administration of the Post-Office Department. Each one of these divisions of the executive branch of the Government is intended in greater or less degree to render substantial advantage and benefit to the citizenship of the country.

The people of my district and my State are entitled to participate in these benefits in accordance with their vocation in life, their location, and their particular condition.

Each one of us is passing through or has passed through the embryo stages of our Congressional career. We know in the beginning how intricate this vast machinery appeared and how among our first duties was the attempt to master these details and ascertain as nearly as we could the relationship of our constituency to each of these governmental branches. Speaking comparatively, how much less must our people who are busily engaged in their daily occupations and who have little time to devote to these matters—I say how much less must they know regarding the intricacies of this Government and the benefits which they are entitled to receive. It is the duty of a Representative to inform himself and then to inform his constituents individually and collectively of any advantage which they may receive from any Department of the Government and to insist that they shall enjoy equal rights with those of other sections. And when a citizen or a community takes the initiative and prefers through their Representative a request to be admitted to participation in benefits, it is the duty of such Representative, with promptitude and zeal, to comply with their request and to insist that they shall receive every advantage consistent with the law of the land.

I subscribe to another proposition—that in the distribution of all these benefits of a nonpartisan nature a Member of Congress should discharge his duty to his constituents regardless of what may be the politics or the station in life of those who are entitled to them or who prefer requests. I have in an humble way endeavored to live up to this standard and to discharge my duty.

It is intimated in this report that the Members of Congress who have been mentioned were unduly influential with the Department. That really sounds ludicrous, so far as it applies to this side of the House. That a Democrat should exercise undue influence upon a Republican Administration will really be startling news to the country. I was certainly in entire ignorance that I possessed any such occult power and I shall not permit myself to be credulous on this point owing to the discredited source from which it comes.

One of the features mentioned in the report is the matter of securing allowances for clerk hire in third-class and fourth-class post-offices. Now, it must be remembered that this Administration never appoints a postmaster who can not furnish satisfactory evidence of his loyalty to the Republican party, and of this I have no complaint to make. It is a fact, however, that in all the districts represented in this House by Democrats that every postmaster is a member of the opposite party, unless perchance there was no Republican in the community who could fill the office. While allowances for clerk hire were in the interest of good service, yet the main beneficiary necessarily was the Republican incumbent of the office. So here is an additional absurdity—that Democratic Representatives have not only exercised undue influence upon a Republican Administration, but that they have done so in behalf of Republican postmasters. Now, I shall always endeavor to be just toward my political opponents, but I shall hardly commit a wrong in their favor.

The situation in this respect is really creditable. It shows that Members upon this side of the House in the discharge of their public duties stand ready to serve all of their constituents regardless of their party affiliations.

In this report of 218 closely printed pages I have twice received honorable mention. The first is on page 17, in connection with an allowance for clerk hire for the post-office at Williamston, N. C. This is a third-class post-office. Prior to 1903 this office had been receiving an allowance of $40 per annum for clerk hire. This was a sum totally inadequate for the work of the office. The records disclose this to be an important office, the work of which has been constantly growing, and particularly since the establishment of the several free-delivery routes leading from that town. The postmaster, Mr. J. M. Sitterson, made strong representations to his Representative as to the inadequacy of the allowance and insisted that he was entitled to a larger sum. This statement was verified by representations from the patrons of the office. Under these conditions it appeared to be the duty of the Representative to secure a larger allowance, and in February, 1903, I laid the matter before the general superintendent of salaries and allowances. I understood that the postmaster had been directed to keep a count of the separated matter, and that his report had been submitted, and on March 11, 1903, I was advised that the allowance had been increased to $150, to become effective on July 1, 1903; but before this date the order was rescinded and the amount was fixed at $50 per annum.

On February 29, 1904, the postmaster was notified that even this latter allowance of $50 had been discontinued, to take effect from February 1, 1904. These orders were made upon the ground that "no transit matter" was then handled at this office.

There is absolutely no excuse or justification for the Department including the matter of the allowance or disallowance for clerk hire at the post-office at Williamston, N. C., in this report made to Congress. There can not be even the slightest suggestion of wrongdoing upon the part of the Representative. It would seem, however, that it was included among those many third and fourth class post-offices in which an allowance was made and afterwards discontinued because the original allowance was contrary to the regulations. I wish to present briefly the law bearing upon allowances for clerk hire.

Section 308 of the Postal Laws and Regulation provides as follows:

> The Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail routes as distributing or separating offices; and where any such office is of the third (or) fourth * * * class he may make a reasonable allowance to the postmaster for the necessary cost of clerical services arising from such duties.

The post-office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, contained this item: "For separating mail at third and fourth class post-offices, $1,300,000." There was no statute providing a method or standard for the distribution of this appropriation among the several third and fourth class offices in the country, but the Department formulated a regulation of their own which they held as confidential and of which there was no record. The only statement ever made was that the amount allowed was regulated by the number of pieces of mail handled in transit. The Postmaster-General in this report, on page 8, states: "The present law providing for allowances for clerk hire at third and fourth class post-offices on account of separating service and unusual business leaves the question of what shall be allowed entirely to the discretion of the Department." I did not know at that time, nor am I yet advised, and I presume every Representative was equally ignorant, as to whether there was any definite regulation upon the subject, but assumed that in any event it was largely a matter of discretion, which appears to be admitted.

This was the situation when representations were made to me concerning the Williamston office. I believed the request of the postmaster for an additional allowance was just, and I felt entirely justified in insisting that it should be increased. Therefore I have no excuse to make for any action of mine in connection with this increased allowance, but, on the contrary, I take pleasure in pointing to it as an effort made in the discharge of my duty.

In this connection it is proper to say that this clerical allowance for third and fourth class post-offices is never made unless it is applied for, no matter how meritorious is the situation. There is nothing in the regulations supplied to postmasters which indicates that they are entitled to or may apply for same. In addition, instances have been brought to my attention of postmasters in my district who have made inquiries upon this subject which have either been ignored or have been met with evasive replies. Under these circumstances it is only natural that postmasters should apply to their Representatives, who in the discharge of their duty should investigate the case and when deserving should insist that the proper allowance be made. And yet by inference criticism is sought to be laid at the door of Congressmen who have responded to such requests and have visited the Department in pursuance of same. It is an unjust reflection; it is contemptible and deserves the severest censure.

My name appears in this report for the second time on pages 215 and 216, with reference to the leasing and equipment of premises for the post-office at Washington, N. C. To the end that nothing may be omitted, I shall insert here as a part of my remarks the full text of the report on this subject.

It appears to be a brief of the correspondence and actions taken in this matter and is full of various abbreviations, some of which I do not understand. Doubtless the Postmaster-General assumed that Congress was entirely familiar with the hieroglyphics of the Department.

WASHINGTON, N. C.

At Washington, N. C., in 1901, when the salary of the postmaster was $1,800, the allowances were $200 for rent and $50 for fuel and light, a total of $250. Correspondence concerning an increase in rental at that time is now in the field in the hands of an inspector. The following is from the brief of the case:

There is nothing on the face of this exhibit which appears to be unusual or which places me in an improper light before this House or the public. The facts simply are that early in 1901 at the request of the postmaster, Mr. John B. Respess, and of other citizens of the city, I called at the Department and presented a letter from the postmaster to me and urged that the postmaster be authorized to negotiate for more commodious quarters for the office. This was followed later by the submission of a proposition from Dr. John C. Rodman for a lease of the premises, which were subsequently accepted and lease executed. The post-office was moved about April 1, 1901, although the lessor only received the old rental of $250 per annum up to the 1st of July, when the increased rate only became effective. Subsequently there was some complaint about the equipment in the office, and the papers were all placed in the hands of Inspector F. N. Davis during the fall of 1903, who entered into various negotiations for the leasing of other premises and for new equipment or for equipment in the premises now occupied. The inspector only made his report on February 26, 1904. A synopsis of this report shows that the inspector failed to enter into any arrangement for new equipment or different quarters, and makes some animadversions against the town which are entirely gratuitous.

On the 9th day of March I applied in writing to the First Assistant Postmaster-General for a copy of the entire record of this case. There may be some persons curious enough to inquire why this matter was inserted in the report by the Postmaster-General, and it may be imagined that the record would disclose something worthy of criticism in connection with this matter, and I deem it of sufficient importance to ask the consent of the House that I may insert in the RECORD a copy of every paper in connection with the leasing of premises for post-office at Washington, N. C., and for equipment of same, and which will be attached to my remarks as an exhibit.

I regret very much to have taxed the patience of the House with this explanation. I was at first inclined to ridicule this report in so far as my name was concerned. There appeared to be nothing on its face as worthy of censure or criticism. Further reflection, however, induced me to entertain a different opinion. I do not believe a single reputable person in my district would suspect my integrity or pay any attention to this remarkable production, but in years to come some censorious gossipmonger might refer to this matter, and at a time when a complete record could not be obtained.

Perhaps one good purpose may have been subserved by sending this report to the House. The people of the country have for several years suspected the administration of the Post-Office Department. These criticisms and charges became so general that they could be no longer ignored, and early in 1903 the President, in a great burst of apparent indignation, directed an investigation to be made, and Hon. J. L. Bristow, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, was selected as the sleuth to ferret out the iniquities. What a parody this was, in beginning what was heralded as a complete investigation! This official set at work a large number of inspectors, and after months of searching they made a report. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General assumed in the beginning that every official in his division was spotless and pure, and not one of them was examined, not a book or transaction opened. Only the division of the First Assistant Postmaster-General came under the wrath and detection of the chief investigator. The Postmaster-General had said himself, in an early interview, that all the charges against the Department were nothing but "hot air." In the meantime Democrats in Congress, joined by a few independent Republicans, were insisting that the investigation had been partial, and that a Congressional committee should be appointed with authority to probe into the administration of the entire Department and to bring to justice, if possible, every grafter who had been indulging in peculation and enriching himself at the expense of the people.

Such suggestions were ignored by the Administration and ridiculed by Republican leaders. Under this cue certain officials in the Department grew bold. "What right," said they, "has Congress to investigate us?" They said in effect, "We will teach these pert legislators a lesson, and we will make a report showing how Members of Congress have had the temerity to approach our august presence and insist upon making representations for their constituents." Of course it would never do to include only Democrats in their report, so they embraced Members of both parties. It was either intended to intimidate or possibly to muddy the waters and to divert the attention of the country from the Department itself. Members of the majority ought now to realize the necessity of a complete Congressional investigation. They should rise above partisan considerations and join with us in an effort to turn on the light in the dark places and then turn the rascals out. Some Members upon the other side, in giving expression to their indignation, have unwittingly divulged their honest opinions.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], on day before yesterday, stated that this report was conceived in sin and born in iniquity. Certainly he should be willing to vote for a complete investigation. The author of this report seems to have enveloped himself in a shroud of mystery, and denial has already been made on behalf of Mr. Bristow. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] to-day made the distinct charge that the official who prepared this report was both a liar and a scoundrel. With the distinct knowledge on his part that at least one unworthy official exists, certainly he will be willing to vote for a committee of investigation.

It is intimated that the majority have resolved upon a plan for the appointment of a committee to investigate the references or charges made against Members in this report and to go no further. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the country will not be content with any such partial investigation. It will be regarded as an attempt to whitewash Representatives and to leave the real criminals unmolested. But one paramount issue stares us in the face and appeals to the judgment and the conscience of this House. You can not expect a Department to investigate itself; it is unnatural, and any attempt must necessarily be abortive.

We are expected not alone to be jealous of our own reputations and the dignity of this Chamber, but we are charged with the high duty of maintaining the honesty and the good name of every Department of this Government. [Applause.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 8th instant, asking for a copy of the entire record of papers in the matter of lease for premises at Washington, N. C., I beg to transmit herewith a copy of all papers on file in this office, including a synopsis of the several inspectors' reports on file, relating to the lease of post-office building at Washington, N. C.

Very respectfully,

R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1904.

The FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

DEAR SIR: I respectfully request that you furnish me a copy of the entire record or papers in the matter of lease of premises for post-office at Washington, N. C. I wish a complete copy, including this letter. I wish copies by 9th instant.

Respectfully, JNO. H. SMALL, M. C.

Synopsis of a report made by Post-Office Inspector F. N. Davis, dated February 26, 1904, relative to lease of premises for post-office at Washington' N. C.

Advises the case arises from complaint of the postmaster that the equipment in the post-office is inadequate; that lock boxes are unsafe, etc. Upon finding the condition of post-office in bad condition, advertised for proposals to secure other quarters, and three were received at a rental of $1,200 per annum each, or more than is paid by $500 a year for other premises in eastern section of the State, and bids were rejected. One T. W. Latham offers to make a lease for a building in the cheap part of town at annual rental of $750. The location would not be satisfactory to the patrons. It is alleged that the present lessor has sufficient influence in the town to prevent proposals being made by other parties at a reasonable rental. The room would be ample if a suitable equipment were furnished, consisting of new lock boxes, mailing cases, bag rack, etc. Suggests that the lessor be required to provide such additional equipment as may be approved by the Department and the postmaster.

SEPTEMBER 14, 1903.

To the POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

I, John C. Rodman, hereby agree to lease, for use of the post-office at Washington, the room 21 feet 6 inches by 63 feet —— inches (inside measurement), on the first floor of the two-story brick premises known as "the Rodman Building," situated on part lot 19, block —, on the south side of Main street, between Market street and Whelar's alley, in Washington, for a term of five years from January 1, 1903, at the annual rental of $1,000, payable quarterly, and subject to the provisions and requirements of the form of lease used by the Post-Office Department, which I have read and carefully noted.

I further agree to furnish said described room with boxes and drawers of a modern pattern in sufficient number, together with all the necessary fixtures and furniture (including free-delivery furniture when necessary) requisite to place said room in a condition in every way satisfactory for use as a post-office, and to keep said room, boxes, fixtures, and furniture (including said free-delivery furniture) in good repair and proper condition to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department, and to furnish all additional boxes, fixtures, and furniture (including additional free-delivery furniture) that may be deemed necessary during the term for which the premises hereinbefore described may be leased, cost of fixtures and furniture not to exceed $2,000.

I further agree to include the furnishing of satisfactory heat, light, water, the heating and lighting fixtures, and the plumbing in good repair and condition during the term of the lease.

I will have the room ready for occupancy by the post-office one hundred and twenty days after the receipt of the notice of acceptance of this proposition by the Post-Office Department and notice of requirements; will furnish safe and closet and urinals for $1,200 a year.

JOHN C. RODMAN.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1903.

To the POSTMASTER-GENERAL.
Washington, D. C.:

I, S. T. Nicholson, hereby agree to lease for use of the post-office at Washington, N. C., the room 24 feet by 82 feet (inside measurement) on the first floor of the three-story building, premises known as "Hotel Nicholson lot," situated on the north side of Main street, between Market street and Respus street, in Washington, for a term of five years, at the annual rental of $1,250, payable quarterly, and subject to the provisions and requirements of the form of lease used by the Post-Office Department.

I further agree to furnish said described room with boxes and drawers of a modern pattern in sufficient number, together with all the necessary fixtures and furniture (including free-delivery furniture when necessary) requisite to place said room in a condition in every way satisfactory for use as a post-office, and to keep said room, boxes, fixtures, and furniture (including said free-delivery furniture) in good repair and proper condition to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department, and to furnish all additional boxes, fixtures, and furniture (including additional free-delivery furniture) that may be deemed necessary during the term for which the premises hereinbefore described may be leased.

I further agree to include the furnishing of satisfactory heat, light, water, a fireproof and burglar-proof safe or vault, and necessary closets and urinals, and will keep said vault, the heating and lighting fixtures, and the plumbing in good repair and condition during the term of the lease.

I will have the room ready for occupancy by the post-office ninety days after the receipt of the notice of acceptance of this proposition by the Post-Office Department.

S. T. NICHOLSON.

UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE,
Washington, N. C., December 19, 1903.

Mr. F. N. DAVIS, Raleigh, N. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. Thomas W. Latham has to-day filled out blank proposal for lease of post-office building and mailed same to you.

The building he proposes to furnish is very undesirably located on Water street, and I do not think it advisable that this proposition be accepted.

Mr. Latham told us when you were here that he would furnish this Water street property for $450, and you will note that he submits proposition for $750.

I have several blank propositions out, and hope to be able to induce some one to submit an acceptable proposition within the next ten days.

Yours, very truly,

T. G. STILLEY, Postmaster,

SIR: I beg to invite attention to communication sent your office under date of July 20, 1903, asking that an inspector be detailed to investigate the matter of requiring the lessor at Washington, N. C., to provide new equipment, boxes, fixtures, and furniture for the post-office premises.

It is desired to take action in this case as soon as possible, and I beg to request that the report of the inspector be forwarded at the earliest possible date.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 8th instant in regard to the equipment of the post-office at Washington, N. C.

Complaint having been made to the Department that the office is not properly equipped, the papers were referred to an inspector for investigation under date of July 20, 1903. This office, of course, has no means of knowing what additional fixtures are required and therefore can not advise the present lessor as to the cost of fitting up the office properly, but the inspector will, if requested, give the lessor full information. Until the inspector's report is received, I can not advise you as to the probable action of the Department, nor can the Department promise to hold the matter in abeyance until you arrive in Washington. However, your recommendations will be given careful consideration and will be complied with if possible.

Very respectfully,

Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

WASHINGTON, N. C., September 8, 1903.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT,
Division of Salaries and Allowances,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On August 4 last I wrote a letter to Dr. Charles P. Grandfield, of your office, with reference to the reequipment of the post-office in this town and also about the rerenting of quarters for the post-office. I refer you to that letter, in which I said a personal interview would be more satisfactory, and asked you to hold the matter in abeyance until I could see you in person, and in reply I received a letter dated August 6 to the effect that you would take no action until after the receipt of the report of the inspector, when you would advise me further. I have had no further reply from your office concerning this matter.

I observe that the postmaster here has posted an advertisement asking for proposals for renting a post-office building with proper equipment. This I take to mean such equipment as may be necessary for a second-class office, being an office similar to this office.

Dr. John C. Rodman, the present lessor, desires to submit a proposition both for lease of building and equipment. As to the building, I may say that I feel quite sure the present building is adequate in every respect. As to the equipment, Doctor Rodman is not advised as to the details of same. He wishes to know the nature of the equipment, with necessary details. While he is desirous of furnishing such an equipment as may answer the demands of the office, still he wishes to furnish same at as reasonable a cost as the conditions permit.

Casually, I met a few days ago in Raleigh, Inspector F. N. Davis, who advised me of having sent to the postmaster here the papers authorizing him to advertise for proposals, which was my first knowledge that any action had been taken by your office.

Doctor Rodman can not make an intelligent proposal of rental until he knows the character and cost of the equipment and the length of lease which will be entered into by the Department.

Yours, very truly,

JNO. H. SMALL, M. C.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, requesting that no action be taken in the matter of requiring the lessor to furnish new equipment until you arrive in Washington the early part of September. WASHINGTON, N. C., August 4, 1903.

Dr. CHARLES P. GRANDFIELD,
Office of Division of Salaries and Allowances,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I write you with reference to the post-office at this, my home town. The present building for the post-office here is leased from Dr. John C. Rodman, which expires about three years from this date. At the time of the leasing satisfactory arrangements were made about the equipment of the post-office, but Doctor Rodman has understood that eventually at least a partial new equipment will be required, and he stands ready to do whatever is right and proper under all the conditions. At the time of the leasing this was a third-class office, but recently, as I understand, it has been advanced to second class. Now, if a new equipment is desired, the expenses would be much greater than is justified by the present rental. I understand that the postmaster and an inspector who has recently visited this office are favorable to the purchase of a new equipment.

Of course I further understand that you would be willing to materially increase the present rental. I would like to take up all this matter with you, but naturally so many details will arise as would make it unsatisfactory to attempt to arrange it by correspondence, and I would prefer, therefore, a personal interview with your office. It is not probable that I shall get to Washington before the early part of September. I am particularly desirous that this whole matter shall remain in abeyance until I can see you and the superintendent in person and go over the situation in detail, and I wish you to have this matter held up until this opportunity is presented. I assume that you will therefore do so, but I would appreciate a line to this effect. I write you personally on account of our long acquaintance and because I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting the new general superintendent, Mr. Waters.

Yours, very truly, JNO. H. SMALL, M. C.

Hon. J. L. BRISTOW,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General,
Division of Post-Office Inspectors.

SIR: I beg to inclose herewith the papers relating to the leasing of premises occupied by the post-office at Washington, N. C., and would request that the same be referred to an inspector and an investigation made to ascertain if the lessor of the quarters should be required to provide a new equipment of boxes, fixtures, and furniture for the office. Attention is invited to the reports on the subject of Inspector Davis, dated May 10, 1901, and December 15, 1902. If, as stated, a new equipment is required, it would seem that the same should be provided by the lessor without greatly increasing the expense for rent, fuel, and light, in view of the fact that his original proposition stated that the room would be provided with an equipment of modern pattern.

The office at Washington was assigned to the second class on July 1 last, and the allowance for rent can now be increased if necessary. A report covering the inspector's views and recommendation is desired as soon as practicable.

Very respectfully, R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE,
Washington, Beaufort County, N. C., July 15, 1903.

Hon. FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to my recent visit to your office in company with Hon. R. H. McNeill relative to securing additional allowance for clerk hire at this office, I beg to remind you that my recollection is that in the course of our conversation you intimated that you would send an inspector here to investigate the necessity for requiring the lessor of the building in which the post-office is located to provide a new equipment, but the inspector has not yet come.

As I have before stated, the present equipment is old and insufficient for the needs of the office. The locks are unsafe, and some of the keys will not only fit the locks they are intended for, but about ten or twelve other boxes.

We now have in this office 240 lock boxes and 7 drawers. We need 300 lock boxes and 100 lock drawers, besides all necessary furniture for the office, such as desks, tables, routing tables, chairs, etc.

Dr. John C. Rodman, the lessor of the building, is willing to fit it up with new fixtures entirely as soon as he hears from the Department, telling him what they will require and how much additional rent will be allowed.

I will state that it is my opinion that if prompt action be taken in this matter the Department will be very much benefited, as we are daily having calls from business men for boxes, which we are unable to supply.

We are also having complaints from box renters about the bad condition of their boxes.

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience in regard to this matter, I beg to remain,

Yours, very respectfully, T. G. STILLEY, Postmaster.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 29th ultimo, you are advised that in calling upon lessor for certain fixtures and furniture for use in post-office you should not request him to provide any fixtures for the rural free-delivery service, as it is not contemplated that the lessors should provide this grade of furniture. The Department furnishes such fixtures. If you are certain that your office will be advanced to the second class July 1 next, it might be well to delay demand upon lessor for a complete new equipment, and only request such additions to present fixtures as are absolutely necessary.

Very respectfully, ——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

WASHINGTON, N. C., December 29, 1902.

Hon. FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

SIR: Replying to yours of the 26th, will respectfully say that since the receipt of Mr. Wynne's letter, December 12, we have been seriously considering the matter of adding to the present post-office outfit.

I have reached this conclusion: That a cabinet outfit is what this office needs, and to force the lessor of premises to put in a part of an outfit now and in such a short time complete the fixtures, making a pieced-up job at a cost exceeding that of a new outfit or a cabinet.

Mr. Wood advanced the idea, when here, that, as the office would go in the second class so soon, it would not be good judgment to ask for more than a general-delivery case.

Now, should this be done, it would necessitate a complete rearrangement of that part of the office, as the present one takes up all the room and is just half large enough.

Hoping that it will meet the approval of the Department, on Dr. Rodman's return from a professional trip I will notify him that on March 1, 1903, he will be required to place in the office a cabinet outfit consisting of general-delivery case for letters and papers, 600 or 800 lock call boxes and drawers, 1 mailing case (150 boxes), stamping table, separating table, bag rack and table, 3 rural free-delivery desks, money-order desks, cupboards for blanks, etc. This gives him time to make the arrangements, and we will do the best we can till then.

I merely suggest this, as the present equipment was accepted without approval and as a whole is insufficient and in bad repair; so much so that I can't see the advisability in putting in any additional fixtures.

Hoping that the above or a similar suggestion will meet your approval, awaiting an early reply,

Yours, respectfully,

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On Friday, March 28, 1902, our mail, which contained thousands of dollars' worth of checks, sent to us in the regular course of business, was through error taken out of our box in the post-office, and when the party returned it to the office he put it back in the wrong box, thereby causing us a great deal of delay and worry, besides the risk of our mail getting into improper parties' hands. It seems that on account of the worn condition of locks on the boxes in this post-office through long use, that a number of the boxes can be opened by almost any of the keys. We hear a great many complaints along this line. Also complaints from parties who desire to rent boxes and can not for the reason there is none to rent. From the amount of mail matter delivered here and the constantly increasing demand for boxes, it does seem that we should have a post-office that could accommodate those desiring boxes and have such boxes as would furnish ample protection to our mail. I make this complaint for the benefit of the service, with the hope that we will in the near future have ample accommodation and protection.

I am, very truly,

A. M. DUMAY, Cashier.

SIR: Inclosed herewith find a letter from A. M. Dumay, cashier of the First National Bank, Washington, N. C., who makes a complaint of inefficient service at the post-office of this place. Mr. Dumay states that the post-office equipment now in use is inadequate, and it is suggested that a post-office inspector be instructed to investigate the conditions with a view of making such improvements as may be necessary.

Very respectfully,

J. M. MASTEN,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Synopsis of a report made by Post-Office Inspector F. N. Davis, dated December 15, 1902, regarding alleged inefficient service at Washington, N. C.

States report is made on complaint of A. M. Dumay, regarding alleged bad condition of the boxes and equipment. Finds upon investigation that the boxes are badly worn and that one key will frequently open a number of boxes; that keys are in poor condition, and also that the whole equipment is wholly inadequate for needs of postal service and so badly worn that it is unserviceable.

The rental paid is sufficient for the lessor to provide a decent equipment, but instead the office has been fitted out with worn-out furniture and a homemade cabinet. The rental should be withheld until suitable equipment has been provided.

Hon. GEORGE W. BEAVERS,
General Superintendent of Salaries and Allowances,
Post-Office Department.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 13th ultimo, initials "A. G.," respecting the condition of the equipment of the post-office at Washington, N. C., I beg to state that I have made a careful investigation of the present needs of this office, with the result that I do not think an entire new outfit is needed at this time. It seems probable that the office will be advanced to the second class in a short time, and when such change shall be made will be ample time to consider the question of requiring the lessor to furnish a new and modern equipment.

In connection with this case I regard it as quite important that the general-delivery cases should be somewhat enlarged in accordance with the ideas of the postmaster, and request that the lessor be notified to make the alteration.

Very respectfully,

GEO. L. WOOD,
Assistant Superintendent.

NOVEMBER 13, 1902.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD,

SIR: The premises occupied by the post-office at Washington, N. C., are under a lease to the Department for a term of five years from July 1, 1901, at the annual rental of $460, including complete equipment, fuel, and light. The postmaster reports that the ownership of the boxes is in dispute, and that there is urgent need for a new outfit; that the general-delivery case is not satisfactory, and that there is not sufficient furniture. Please ascertain whether the lessor is complying with the terms of his contract, and whether a new outfit of boxes is necessary.

Mr. JOHN C. RODMAN, Washington, N. C.

SIR: This office is advised that the title to the box outfit in post-office premises is in dispute. It appears that former postmasters have been selling outright boxes in present equipment to individual patrons, giving title thereto. Under this condition of affairs, the postmaster is unable to enforce the rules of the Department in regard to collecting box rents and closing boxes against patrons who do not pay for use of same. It is further alleged that present equipment is old and entirely inadequate for the service required. Your proposition, which was accepted, calls for modern equipment of fixtures and furniture requisite for satisfactory use in post-office. You will please advise me at your earliest convenience what steps you will take in regard to complying with terms of your proposition.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE,
Washington, N. C., February 15, 1902.

Hon. W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

DEAR SIR: In addition to the inclosed blanks, which are very poorly answered, I beg leave to offer this in way of explanation with all respects to the Department:

The present box outfit was bought in 1886, as best I can learn, by the postmaster and sold by him to the individuals, and from that time to about a year ago this same ex-postmaster has been selling and trading these boxes, and now claims about forty unsold. About a year ago we were notified by Inspector Davis that this was illegal. I had neither bought nor sold up to this time, nor have not allowed it done since that time. Now, I explained to Mr. Davis the situation when he was here, and I think convinced him that I could not comply with the new box-rent law. I would further say that this quarter we will rent what boxes we have. There are a few that are unrented or locked for rent.

Now, these boxes were bought by the parties holding them. We can lock them for rent, but we can't force them to surrender the keys. Now, I wish to suggest the idea that the present boxes be condemned by the Department—first, in order to start the new system, thereby complying with the wishes of the Department; second, because the outfit is worn out; by owning the boxes the owner feels at liberty, if he loses a key or his lock out of fix, to take it to a shop and have it ruined; in this way we are beginning to have complaint that one key unlocks three or four boxes; third, and last, the reason why the outfit should be condemned is that the outfit is not sufficient. Our general delivery is so heavy that it can hardly be handled. We are daily having application for boxes, and have not got them, for the above reason.

I respectfully say that the inclosed blanks were received during the busy holidays and were overlooked and not intentionally neglected.

The questions are poorly answered, but if you get an understanding of the situation I hope you will appreciate the fact that I have done the best I could. In conclusion, I would say that my term of office is about out. Congressman SMALL got the Department to agree to let matters stand till the end of my term.

Respectfully,

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1901.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL, Washington, N. C.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, relative to increase in rent prior to July 1, 1901, for the Washington, N. C., post-office. It has not yet been determined how much, if any, of the old appropriation will be available.

On October 1, 1900, there were 53 offices advanced to the Presidential class; January 1, 1901, 112 more, and on April 1, 1901, 36, making a total of 201 new third-class offices. These offices, with few exceptions, received no allowance prior to July 1, 1901, the date the new appropriation took effect. However, when the balance of old appropriation is known, the matter will receive due consideration.

Very respectfully,

———— ————,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. GEORGE W. BEAVERS,
General Superintendent Division of Salaries and Allowances,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I received yours of the 11th instant in reply to mine of the 9th instant. I beg to say that you misunderstood the purport of my letter. I was aware that an order had been made fixing the allowance for the post-office here at $460 per annum from July 1, 1901.

What I referred to was an increased allowance from the time of removal of the post-office to the present building up to July 1, 1901. You may recall that at the time you increased the allowance for this post-office, effective from July 1, that you stated at the time that the old rate would have to apply up to July 1, but if at the end of the fiscal year on June 30 you found that you had an available sum on hand, that you would be very glad to make an additional allowance for the period up to June 30, inclusive. It was this increased allowance to which I referred. I hope still that you will be able to make some increase for that period.

Yours, very truly,

JNO. H. SMALL, M. C.

Hon. GEORGE W. BEAVERS,
Superintendent Salaries and Allowances, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BEAVERS: In connection with the renting by John C. Rodman of the post-office building in this town I wish to recall a very kind suggestion made by you. You stated at the time of rental that he would have to accept the old rental up to July 1, as the appropriation was so nearly exhausted, but you told me if I would remind you, that you would endeavor to give him an additional sum. The amount which he has received up to July 1 is entirely inadequate, and you will do me a personal favor as well as perform an act of justice, if you will see if you can make Doctor Rodman an additional allowance. Kindly give this matter favorable consideration and let me hear from you at your convenience.

Very sincerely,

SIR: The inclosed lease in duplicate is herewith forwarded to you with instructions to have same executed by party named in body of lease before a notary public, whose seal must be affixed to each acknowledgment. If the leases are executed prior to July 1, it will be necessary to attach a $1 internal-revenue stamp to lease marked "original" at the place indicated on second page of lease, and have it canceled in the usual manner. After the leases have been executed they should be returned promptly to this office for further action.

If the leases are executed after July 1 it will not be necessary to attach an internal-revenue stamp.

Synopsis of a report made by Post-Office Inspector Davis, dated May 10, 1901, relative to fitting up post-office premises, Washington, N. C.

Inspector Davis stated the case called for information as to whether proposition of John C. Rodman, lessor of post-office premises at Washington, N. C., had been complied with. In his opinion, the room had been fitted up in a manner satisfactory to the postmaster and apparently to the patrons. The equipment is of home construction, but is new and presents good appearance. COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1901.

Hon. GEORGE BEAVERS,
Chief Division of Salaries and Allowances,
Post-Office Department.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the post-office at Washington, N. C., and the proposed lease of building from John C. Rodman, I herewith inclose proposition in writing from John C. Rodman for lease of building. You will note that there have been several alterations and interlineations, but I hope that the same will not materially affect the proposition as required to be made. As I understood, the provision for "free-delivery furniture" might be stricken out, and the word "fuel" be substituted for "light." As to the provision for a "fireproof and burglar-proof safe or vault," I wrote Doctor Rodman that as the postmaster already owned a proper safe he would have no trouble on this point; but there was really no necessity for striking out this clause. As to the provision for "necessary closets and urinals," I beg to say that we have no public water supply in our town, and there is no room on this particular lot for the maintenance of sanitary closets; but Doctor Rodman proposes to provide these at a very convenient distance, satisfactory to the postmaster. I hope this matter can now be closed at an early date.

Very respectfully,

JNO. H. SMALL, M. C.

FEBRUARY 19, 1901.

To the POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

I, John C. Rodman, hereby agree to lease, for use of the post-office at Washington, the room 63 feet by 23 feet (inside measurement), on the first floor of the two-story brick building, premises known as Rodman Con. Building, situated on my lot, plot 1, No. 19, on the south side of Main street, between Market street and Union alley, in Washington, for a term of five years from July 1, 1901, at the annual rental of $460, payable quarterly, and subject to the provisions and requirements of the form of lease used by the Post-Office Department, as herein set out and no further.

I further agree to furnish said described room with boxes and drawers of a modern pattern in sufficient number, together with all the necessary fixtures and furniture requisite to place said room in a condition in every way satisfactory for use as a post-office, and to keep said room, boxes, fixtures, and furniture in good repair and proper condition to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department, and to furnish all additional boxes, fixtures, and furniture that may be deemed necessary during the term for which the premises hereinbefore described may be leased.

I further agree to include the furnishing of satisfactory fuel, light, the heating and lighting fixtures, and the plumbing in good repair and condition during the term of the lease.

I will have the room ready for occupancy by the post-office fifteen days after the receipt of the notice of acceptance of this proposition by the Post-Office Department.

JOHN C. RODMAN.

POST-OFFICE, Washington, N. C.

F. N. DAVIS, Esq.

DEAR SIR: It is likely that we will move our office across the street; is making calculation to move the old boxes to the new building, in spite of any explanation I can give to the contrary.

Now, if the Department expects us to keep a key deposit, etc., you know we can't do so in no other way than do away with the old and get new boxes.

By doing this and reduce the rent we could a hundred more, nearly sufficient to make good the present box rec. Hoping that you will act or submit the matter the proper department,

I am, respectfully,

JOHN B. RESPESS, Jr.,
Assistant Postmaster.

POST-OFFICE,
Washington, N. C., February 20, 1901.

Hon. W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General:

I respectfully write you in regard to moving the post-office at Washington, N. C., the equipment of the new building, and the disposition of the old equipment, etc., as per instruction of Hon. JOHN H. SMALL, Member of Congress, First district.

The instruction we have had was $460 per year for building, furnished, including light and fuel. Now, does this mean that Doctor Rodman, owner of property, is to furnish nothing but light and fuel, or furnish the building only, moving a lot of old, worn-out stuff, such as an old desk top on rough scantling legs, one old table, one cupboard that we keep our blanks in, to which the mice have free access and use the top shelf for nesting, two old goods boxes which hold a part of the records of the office—the rest of the records are packed up exposed to rats or anything else—and a few old call boxes that are used for letter or mailing cases? This is the furniture now in use and has been for twenty years, except one secretary I had built since I took charge of the office, in which I keep my official envelopes, stamped envelopes, cards, etc. How will this look in a new building?

Again, the lock box now in use was bought about fifteen years ago by the postmaster and sold to individuals. No record was made of the sale and there has been no records kept since. If other offices have tried to adopt the key deposit under just such circumstances, would it not be better in the beginning to get right by getting new boxes? I mean, have Rodman get them, thus preventing so much annoyance to the Department and hardship on the postmaster.

I would further suggest, your honor, first, we have 240 boxes, rent 50 cents per quarter. Number rented this quarter, about 238. If the whole was rented, $120 would be the proceeds. Now, if we have 460 boxes, rent 30 cents, the proceeds would be the same and reduce the general delivery one-third, also making rent and key deposit 50 cents and the yield to the Government the same. I think now is the time to make this change, as we could sell the old boxes to the Plymouth post-office. I hope you will clearly understand the situation and give me an early reply.

By requiring the new outfit, as I suggest, you will greatly please the patrons, who are anxious to petition same if necessary.

Asking your pardon for such a lengthy communication,

I am, respectfully,

JNO. B. RESPESS, Postmaster.

Synopsis of report of Post-Office Inspector F. N. Davis, dated February 4, 1901, relative to new equipment for post-office at Washington, N. C.

Mr. Davis advises that the post-office is about to be moved across the street to a new building, and in his opinion the condition of the boxes in the post-office is such that it would not be desirable to move them into the new quarters. As rental is to be increased, the lessor should be required to provide a new equipment, and if he will take such action it would appear to be advisable to enter into a lease for the premises for term of ten years.

DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 14th instant relative to the post-office at Washington, N. C., authorizing the postmaster to rent the room proposed at $450 per annum, to include heat, light, and equipment, effective from July 1, next. I have forwarded all the papers to the postmaster.

SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1901.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
House of Representatives, United States.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation to-day in regard to increasing the allowance for rent at Washington, N. C., I beg to state that in view of the condition of the appropriation it will not be possible to increase the present allowance before July 1 next. If, however, the postmaster can rent the room proposed (21½ by 63 feet) at $450 per annum, to include heat, light, and equipment, the Department will enter into a lease for a term of five years from July 1, provided the location is satisfactory to the patrons of the office. I inclose herewith form of lease and blank propositions.

The postmaster was directed to-day to make a report showing the location of the proposed site and to furnish a petition of citizens favoring the same.

Very respectfully,
——— ———, Superintendent.

WASHINGTON, N. C., January 1, 1901.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to the pressing needs of the post-office at this place. With a population of at least 15,000 supplied with their mail from this office, we are hurdled up in this office, 71 by 12½ feet, as the within rough map shows, and for the want of room we are compelled to do more work than any other office in the State to amount of business we do. The little, narrow pass way, 4½ feet, is very often so packed that neither ingress or egress can be made through them. There are patrons who are paying for boxes, many of which can not get to them for the jam. I can, if permitted to do so, rent a building in the same neighborhood 62½ by 21½ feet, just being completed, of brick, for $30 per month or $90 a quarter. This building is as large as we at present need, and can be so fitted up as to be of great convenience to the business patrons of this office, and there is a very strong local clamor for the change.

I hope your constituents, as I am sure they will, have your hearty cooperation in securing this much-needed change. If a petition is necessary, I can send you one with the name of every patron of this office, except the owners of the present building, for the change. I send a rough draft of both buildings, and you can see at a glance the difference.

Another matter, personal to myself, I beg your help. It is to have an increased allowance for light and fuel for the Washington office. We have been allowed $50 a year for lights and fuel. This was quite enough until we had gas put in, which is so much better, but more expensive. From our November and December receipts it looks as if our gas bill alone may amount to nearly or quite $50. We have to work from 5 a. m. to 9 p. m., and our gas bill and fuel (coal $6 per ton of 2,000 pounds) is heavy. We are as economical as possible; only one small stove in the building, which is insufficient to warm it. Help us on this line, and add to the obligations we are already under.

Yours, truly,
J. B. RESPESS, Postmaster.

WASHINGTON, N. C., April 11, 1901.

Hon. W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General:

In obedience to instructions, I have the honor to inform you that we moved in the Rodman Building on the 4th day of April, 1901.

I am, respectfully, yours,
JOHN B. RESPESS, Postmaster.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman is granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH].

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, on page 61 of the report on the Hay resolution will be found the only account, I believe, in this indictment that involves myself, and in order that my constituents may have full information as to what that account contains, I send the document to the Clerk and request that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman one more minute.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At Carthage, Ill., in 1899 the annual salary of the postmaster was $1,700 and gross receipts $5,831. The allowance for rent, fuel, and light at this time was $410 per annum.

Under date of May 30, 1900, Hon. B. F. MARSH indorsed a request of the lessors for increase in rent to $420 per annum, with an additional allowance for fuel and light. Congressman MARSH's letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 30, 1900.

Hon. PERRY S. HEATH,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

DEAR SIR: I respectfully refer to you the inclosed letter signed by M. F. Berry, W. H. Moore, and N. J. Hilfrink, on behalf of Bentley Lodge, No. 412, I. O. O. F., making application for additional allowance for light and heat for the post-office building at Carthage, Hancock County, Ill. All that these gentlemen say as to the superior fitting, decoration, and management of this post-office I can heartily commend. It is as well kept an office as could be found, and in point of finish and accommodations will doubtless equal any post-office of its size anywhere. The office room is a large one, the building a very fine one, and the lock boxes, etc., up to date in every respect. I respectfully recommend a favorable consideration of the application. The rental now allowed is $34.11 per month, and if your Department can increase this to $35 per month and give an allowance sufficient to cover the cost of lighting and heating I believe the action would be fair and just.

Very respectfully,
B. F. MARSH.

Under date of June 2, 1900, the Department replied to Congressman MARSH as follows:

"JUNE 2, 1900.

"Hon. B. F. MARSH, House of Representatives.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo, with inclosure from lessors of post-office premises at Carthage, Ill., I beg to inform you that the allowance for rent, fuel, and light will be increased to $460 per annum, effective July 1, next. This amount is all that Congress authorized the Department to pay for rent, fuel, and light for any third-class post-office."

During the reading of the above, and before the report was concluded, the time of the gentleman again expired, and he was yielded one minute by Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The time having again expired,

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to incorporate a few remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD will be granted the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say further that I stand by the above record.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] seven minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, during fourteen years of public service no one, so far as I know, has ever reflected upon my conduct as a public official. It remained for some scoundrel in the Post-Office Department to do this. Now, this is a time when one should use plain language, and I propose to do it.

It seems that there are in the Post-Office Department not only thieves and grafters, but libelers as well. [Applause.] I have absolutely nothing to conceal. If, after hearing my statement, there is any decent man who will say I have done anything wrong, I will resign my seat in Congress.

There is a little post-office in my district called Mapleville. I was informed by the postmaster at that place that his office was made the distributing point for several other offices, among which were three offices—Margaret, Stallings, and Cedar Rock. I was informed by the postmaster that he received no pay upon the cancellation of stamps on letters passing through his office to these places, except, of course, upon letters dropped in his office; that his work was quite onerous, and that he would either be compelled to employ a clerk or devote a larger part of his time in discharging the duties of the office. After making this statement in my letter to the Postmaster-General, I concluded with these words:

I have the honor, therefore, to inquire if there is any rule of the Department which will permit such increase in his (the postmaster's) pay as may be commensurate with the service rendered.

I will insert in the RECORD my letter in full, and also a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, stating that this was the only letter written by me on the subject of clerk hire at Mapleville.

Now, upon this a charge is to be brought against me, alleging that I used improper influence to secure an increase in this man's pay. I, a Democrat, serving his first term in Congress, charged with the offense of exercising undue influence over a Republican official. [Laughter and applause.] And the same may be said of other gentlemen upon the Democratic side who are included in this wholesale indictment. The idea that we had used undue influence with Republican officials is absurd. We who wish every Republican turned out; who are willing in a legitimate way to make the pathway of the Republican Administration as stony as possible; we are to be charged with exercising undue influence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience with crime during ten years of my life. During that time I learned that long participation in crimes makes a man bold, and the same boldness seems to characterize certain officials of the Post-Office Department. We propose to investigate them. In spite of all sorts of Republican diplomacy, it has cropped out that the Post-Office Department is a seething pool of corruption. A resolution is introduced to investigate those in charge of this Department. The reply they send in here amounts to this: "You have violated the laws yourself. You are as guilty as we are. If you do not hold up this investigation we will expose you." This reply of Post-Office officials amounts to blackmail, and the man who allows himself to be intimidated has lost his manhood and is not fit to sit in this body. [Applause.]

The gantlet has been thrown down. The proposition is up to you gentlemen on the other side. They have defied you; they have insulted you. Will you pick up the gantlet? I repeat it, the proposition is up to you. So far as we are concerned, every man upon this side of that aisle will vote for a resolution to investigate the whole Post-Office Department to the very bottom. [Applause.]

The country is demanding an investigation. If those in charge of that Department have done nothing wrong, then they have nothing to fear; an investigation will vindicate them. If they are guilty of corruption and rascality, then the resolution will develop it, and we can return to our constituents conscious that we have done our duty.

What is the necessity of raising a committee to investigate what Members have done? The report of the committee, which is on our desks, already shows what Members of this body have done. What need is there for any other investigation? The country may charge that we have whitewashed ourselves; but if you insist upon raising a committee to investigate the conduct of Members of this body, we upon the Democratic side will help you pass it. We want the lights turned on, not only upon our own conduct, but upon that of the Post-Office officials as well.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. POU. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not know whether the Post this morning accurately stated it or not, but it said there was a committee to be organized before which such Members of Congress as chose could appear. The gentleman from North Carolina has been prosecuting attorney. Did he ever know the guilty to appear voluntarily before the grand jury? [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. Never! Mr. Speaker, the grand jury is the last body in the world the guilty man desires to confront. The grand jury hunts for the criminal. The criminal never hunts for the grand jury. I believe, Mr. Speaker, this whole affair is simply another effort to suppress an investigation of a Department which I believe to be very corrupt. If a Member can not invoke the rules of the Post-Office Department to assist officials in his district to secure their lawful pay, then what can he do? I would like for some Post-Office official to tell us what we can do without being slandered and criticised. [Applause.] Members will be reluctant to have any dealings with this Department hereafter. One feels now that when he enters that building he is breathing a polluted atmosphere. Let us turn the hose on it. Let us wash out every room and every passage and every closet in that building. Let us do this even if they do attempt to blackmail us.

Can you Republicans afford to assist in a suppression of this investigation? Can you afford to go before the country with such a record as this? There are some things above party. When the honor of the Republic is assailed party differences are obliterated, and I say when the honor of this body is assailed, when an attempt is made to hold it up, to blackmail its Members, all party differences should be suppressed. That we should not only submit to an investigation of ourselves when necessary, but we should investigate those who have the audacity to use such tactics in protecting themselves. Let us not make a partisan question of this matter. I should think any Republican would feel humiliated to be forced by his party to submit to such treatment. No man should be the slave of his party; certainly not when his honor is attacked.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is about all I care to say. In conclusion, I repeat that, with respect to myself, the statement that I recommended an increase in the salary of the postmaster at Mapleville or that he receive an allowance for a clerk is false. I remember writing that letter. It is well known in my district that I have always refrained from asking favors from this Administration and I was careful not to make a request for an increase in the emoluments of the post-office at Mapleville. Hereafter I shall be more cautious than ever when I enter the Post-Office building. I shall demand that my constituents have their rights, but I shall proceed with greater caution than ever before for fear that I may be misrepresented or libeled.

I want to say, in conclusion, that every official of the Post-Office Department who has attempted to expose the corruption and rascality there ought to be commended; but I believe that only the surface of what has been taking place has been exposed up to this time. Let us go to the very bottom if it takes the entire summer to do so. Let this body assert its manhood in spite of party dictation, and let us see to it, if possible, that every man who has been false to his trust is exposed to the public gaze.

The situation now is about this: We propose to investigate the the Post-Office. That Department replies: "If we have violated the law you influenced us to do it; you need investigating yourselves." The resolution you Republicans propose to pass responds, in substance: "Yes; that is true; we will inaugurate a whitewashing process, and let the whole matter drop there." What is the meaning of all this change which has taken place on the Republican side of this Chamber? Yesterday some of you were almost swearing that there should be a full investigation of this Department. To-day you seem to be ready to pass the McCall resolution and let the matter drop. An amendment to that resolution will be offered, providing for an investigation of the entire Post-Office Department. Every Democrat will vote for it. I wonder if any Republican will vote against it?

Mr. Speaker, let us have a committee clothed with full power to investigate both sides. Don't let this be a one-sided investigation. I hope no Member will raise any point of order against any resolution providing for a full investigation of both sides.

You can raise your whitewashing committee if you wish. For one I shall not go before it. Conscious of the perfect rectitude of my conduct, I do not need any whitewashing from your committee. The RECORD will contain a statement of all I have done with respect to increasing the pay of public officers, and I shall respectfully decline the services of your committee if you raise it. Not a Member from my State or Senator has done the slightest thing he ought not to have done. Not one of them needs the services of your committee.

Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from a postmaster in my district to-day, saying that the establishment of our new rural-delivery routes had so increased the work in his office that he would be compelled to resign if he could not get an increase in his salary. Now, what am I to do? This man has been holding the office largely for the accommodation of the public. If I present his case to the Department I run the risk of being misrepresented and slandered. It is well known that the establishment of the rural free-delivery service dispenses with the need of many fourth-class post-offices, and of course increases the work in the offices which remain, in some instances without a corresponding increase in the pay of the postmaster.

For instance, the postmaster at Mapleville was receiving $81 per annum, and yet he informed me that the work was such that he would be forced to engage the services of a clerk or remain in the office most of the time. Nearly all of the postmasters in my district are Republicans, but in discharging my duties in Washington I have paid no heed to the politics of my constituents in my efforts to see that they were treated fairly. This shall be my course in future, notwithstanding I have been libeled.

As long as I am a Member of this body, by God's help I shall try to do my duty. At least it shall not be said with truth that I ever cast a vote to aid in suppressing an investigation in any Department where I believe corruption exists. [Prolonged applause.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1904.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of a letter written by you under date of January 11, 1902, relative to an increase in the salary of the postmaster at Mapleville, N. C.

The inclosed letter is the only one written by you on the subject of clerk hire at the Mapleville post-office on file in this office.

Very respectfully,
R. J. WYNNE,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1902.

To the honorable POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to address you in reference to the inadequacy of the pay received by the postmaster at Mapleville, Franklin County, N. C.

The aforesaid office is made the distributing point for several other offices, among which are Margaret, which has been recently established, Stallings, and Cedar Rock. I am informed that the postmaster at Mapleville receives no pay by way of cancellation of stamps on letters addressed to these various offices, except, of course, on letters dropped in his office. The work is quite onerous, and the postmaster is compelled to employ a clerk or give a large portion of his own time in discharging the duties of the office.

I have the honor, therefore, to inquire if there is any rule of the Department which will permit such increase in his pay as may be commensurate with the service rendered.

Yours, respectfully, EDWD. W. POU.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am under obligations to the gentleman from Tennessee, and especially to the House for its cordial reception, but at this time I will return the time to the gentleman from Tennessee and endeavor to get more than ten minutes after we have taken the vote on this motion to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to give the gentleman from Wisconsin more time, but I have only eighteen minutes left.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEEMER].

Mr. DEEMER. Mr. Speaker, in the report of Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow to the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee, under the head of "Allowances for clerk hire," on page 18, among the list of Pennsylvania Representatives I find my name mentioned as having recommended an increase in the allowance for the Westfield post-office, an increase having been made from $250 to $600 per annum. I desire to place myself correctly upon the records with reference to this report.

I would state that I received a letter from E. S. Holcomb, postmaster at Westfield, of which I have a copy of the original in my hand, made by the First Assistant Postmaster-General's department, as follows:

WESTFIELD, PA., November 29, 1901.

Hon. ELIAS DEEMER, Williamsport, Pa.

MY DEAR SIR: Some days ago I wrote Senator PENROSE for his cooperation in getting the appropriation for clerk hire raised at this office. In reply he asked me to put my proposition through you, which I will now do. Some days ago we had an inspector here, and in his report he has reported we were not receiving over half as much as we should for the work. Our appropriation is now $250, and I am spending $250 more out of my salary for clerk hire. At the time we weighed the mail last we had over 14,000 pounds of incoming mail and over 9,000 pounds of outgoing mail in forty days. I trust that you will look this matter up for me. We are also paying $100 more for rent than is the appropriation. We can get a place out of the business portion of the town, but suppose the Department would like to have the office accessible to the business people.

Thanking you in advance for this great favor, I am,

Truly, yours, E. S. HOLCOMB.

Soon after I received this letter I called at the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and handed this letter to J. M. Masten, the chief clerk. The original letter is now on file in the Department. He replied that they would consider the matter and advise me. In reply I received a letter dated December 7, 1901, as follows:

Hon. ELIAS DEEMER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to letter from postmaster addressed to you, I beg to advise you that the question of an increased allowance for clerk hire at Westfield, Pa., will be favorably considered upon receipt of report showing the amount of transit matter handled at that office.

Very respectfully,

W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

I hold in my hand copy of another letter received from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, as follows:

WESTFIELD, PA., December 17, 1901.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your order of the 6th instant, we have counted mail in transit for the week ending December 14. I am now paying $450 to the assistant postmaster and $150 to a lady. The gross receipts of this office have increased $600 in the past year, which consequently increases the work aside from the distribution.

Trusting the Department will act upon this, I am,

Respectfully,

EDWIN S. HOLCOMB, Postmaster.

I heard nothing further from this until I received another letter from the Department, of which the following is a copy:

DECEMBER 21, 1901.

Hon. ELIAS DEEMER, House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to your recommendation, I have the honor to advise you that in accordance therewith the allowance at Westfield, Pa., has been increased from $250 to $600 per annum, to take effect January 1, 1902.

Very respectfully,

W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all there was with reference to this transaction, as far as I am concerned. When I handed the postmaster's letter to the chief clerk I made no recommendation. I did not know then, nor do I know now, whether he was entitled to the increase or not.

No one outside of the Post-Office Department can tell what amount of allowance for clerk hire a postmaster is entitled to. There is no law upon the subject; it all rests with the Department. I merely desired the postmaster to have what the Department found him entitled to have. I took the matter up at the request of the postmaster, believing it to be my duty to do so and to interest myself in seeing that he received what he was justly entitled to.

The letter of December 21, 1901, addressed to me is supposed to have been dictated by Mr. Beavers. You will notice in this letter he states, "Referring to your recommendation, I have the honor to advise you," etc. As I have already stated, I made no recommendation; but the present First Assistant Postmaster-General informs me that that was the practice uniformly of Mr. Beavers in replying to Representatives in Congress, upon the ground that the Representative could show the letter to his constituent and that this increase was granted at his request.

Mr. Wynne further informs me that when he came into office he objected to this form of letter being used.

Even if I had recommended an increase, it was for the Department to determine whether the postmaster was entitled to the increase or not, under the law and the custom of the Department.

In this list also appears the name of the Hon. Horace B. Packer, my predecessor, who was in Congress four years. During his term the allowances for the office at Knoxville were increased from $80 to $200, to take effect July 1, 1899. I have a copy of a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster-General's Office, dated March 8, 1899, which reads as follows:

CLERK HIRE, KNOXVILLE, PA.

Hon. H. B. PACKER, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your personal recommendation in connection with the above subject, I have the honor to state that the annual allowance for clerk hire at the above office has been increased from $80 to $200, to take effect July 1, 1899.

I am informed that this letter was also dictated by Mr. Beavers.

I also have a copy of a letter dated February 19, 1901, to the Hon. H. B. Packer, further advising him of the increase of the allowance for clerk hire at the Knoxville (Pa.) post-office from $200 to $300 per annum from July 1, 1901, in compliance with his recommendation.

I also have a copy of a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster-General to the Hon. Horace B. Packer, dated June 11, 1900, referring to previous correspondence, and advising him that the allowance for clerk hire at Coudersport, Pa., had been increased from $250 to $320 per annum, effective from July 1, 1900.

My predecessor was a Member of Congress four years and I have been a Member now a little over three years, and during these seven years increases for these two offices were allowed during the term of my predecessor and one during the time that I have been a Member. I presume that my predecessor did just what I did and other Congressmen have done. These requests come to the Congressmen and they are referred to the proper Department for consideration.

I believe it to be my duty to look after the interests of the people I have the honor to represent. This I have endeavored to do to the best of my ability. If there are dishonest or incompetent officials in the Post-Office Department who make mistakes it is no fault of mine. I have given you the facts as they are. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH].

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of interest has been manifested in the report and resolution now before the House. The reason for that interest is twofold. First, it is a very important matter, and next it involves the reputation of the Members of this House. I do not care how much any gentleman may refine or apologize for it, I denounce this report that has been thrown voluntarily on the desks of Members as a gratuitous insult by a great Executive Department of this Government. [Applause.]

The House of Representatives, Mr. Speaker, has always been, in the estimation of thinking people, the highest expression of the popular will. To this body have been accredited the representative citizens of the Republic from the time of its birth; men from every State in the Union and from all the walks of life; men of known probity and character, fairly representative of all classes of our people, have here discharged their public duty. Here in the House of Representatives Mr. Blaine was chosen to lead our party. I, as a boy, sat in the national Republican convention at Chicago twenty-four years ago and saw the popular demonstration of the public will lift from this House its most conspicuous figure, a giant in politics in our country, and James A. Garfield led us to victory in that campaign. [Applause.] The service of William McKinley as a Member of Congress fitted him for the most conspicuous service ever rendered his country by a President of the United States. He united his party without resorting to any of the arts of the demagogue, and left as a legacy the priceless memory of a well-spent life. Sir, since I have been a Member of Congress I have seen fifteen distinguished men chosen from this body and sent to the Senate of the United States because of their character and fitness demonstrated here.

Since I have been a Member of this body the governors of five States have been taken from this House, and they have given to their States administrations of which all have been proud. [Applause.]

The Post-Office Department has voluntarily undertaken to cast a stigma upon this great Chamber of the people. They have gone out of their way to give partial facts, which, fully explained, would have been creditable to every Member, and then in a little footnote, which would require a magnifying glass to read, have said: "Where no excess is shown the allowance was warranted at the time it was authorized," thus exonerating nineteen-twentieths of the men named. Why were they mentioned at all? Let the guilty author of this volume answer.

Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is the buffer state in our political system. We stand between the Executive Departments of this Government and the people. We are the only body of men high in governmental affairs for whom the people can vote for directly. We are their chosen servants, and are here to do their bidding. They can not vote directly for a President. Electors must be chosen to express the popular will. They can not vote directly for Senators, because the legislature must elect Senators. I repeat, we are the buffer state in our political system, and if the inquiries daily received from people were addressed to any bureau, or even the President, and such requests denied with scant courtesy, the person making answer would soon become the most unpopular man in the United States. Friendship for the Representative and his known willingness save him from criticism. The contest is now on between the representatives of the people and a bureaucracy that has assumed to sit in judgment upon our official acts without political responsibility to anyone, denying to the public information properly belonging to it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, whenever the people want a popular leader they come to the House of Representatives to get him; and I hope the day is not far distant when the people will deservedly crown that great commoner, the Speaker of this House, who has for more than a third of a century stood like a stone wall on the legislative battle line of the Republic, with the Presidential office, for which he is so admirably fitted. [Loud, long-continued, and enthusiastic applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to this House and to the country that the great menace to governmental efficiency of this country to-day is the irresponsibility of Government employees, owing no allegiance to the people, but with maudlin sycophancy and sickening idolatry transferring their political convictions from one chief to another as rapidly as occasion requires to selfishly cultivate their favor. These great Departments are filled with cabals and cliques who surround the new head, whoever he may be, and artfully lead him over the thorny path of administrative duty without even permitting him to inquire about his surroundings.

I want to say to this House that a Representative directly from the people has no standing in the national capital, in the estimation of these political cruisers. I know a Department of this Government where they have issued orders to the elevator man that whenever a bureau chief gets on the elevator he shall be promptly delivered to his floor, whether Representatives ever are assisted to their destination or not. He may carry a Representative in Congress up and down the heights and depths of that building without stopping to let him off, no matter how urgent his mission; and they do not even allow him mileage for what he travels. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, there is not a bureau of this Government that shows proper respect for the Representatives of the people. If you go into one of these bureaus and undertake to accomplish anything, they shunt you back for a clerk or a Senator, and make you wait until he finishes, although the Senator has six years of tenure and we have only two, and our term of office may expire while we are toasting our heels in the anteroom of some bureau of this Government. [Applause.]

My constituents have sent me to do their work. I have done my best to justify their confidence and shall continue my efforts unabated. If my influence grows with the years, they shall be the beneficiaries; if I err in the discharge of my duty, they shall be the sole judges of my offense. Fair and honest and patriotic, they only ask what they deserve, and, by the help of God, that they shall not be denied. [Great applause and cries of "Go on!" Go on!"]

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] be allowed thirty minutes to conclude his remarks. [Applause and laughter.] And I supplement that with the request that the thirty minutes be added to the time allowed before the vote upon the pending measure.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be continued for three days.

Several Members objected.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope there will be no objection to my proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for two days.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The other day you offered us but an hour on a side. What is the matter with you? What has come over the spirit of your dreams?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that Monday and Tuesday next be set apart for further debate on this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the debate on this resolution be continued during Monday and Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONNER].

[Mr. CONNER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the House to notice that debate closes at twenty-five minutes past 4, and if the House is not in order it is depriving gentlemen on each side of the time to which they are entitled.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let him extend them here on the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would if the House would permit it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Michigan have unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER].

[Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, a few words as to this "roll call" or this report made by the Post-Office Committee, where, as stated by others, "an effort has been made to draw up an indictment against and to class every Member of the House and Senate as a criminal who has discharged a plain duty, either in calling in person or writing a letter to the Post-Office Department for some constituent urging consideration of their claims."

It is as much the duty of a Member of Congress to look after the interests of his constituents in the Departments as it is to come here and take part in the deliberations of this House. Is it the purpose of anybody to cut off these people from communicating with the Departments through their Members in Congress?

If a constituent of yours has a claim or some business matter to attend to in one of the Departments, are you going to tell him to come to Washington, or hire an attorney to attend to this matter? If you do, you relieve Members of Congress of more than one-half of their duties. Your correspondence is reduced three-fourths. These hundreds of trips made to the various Departments during the year by each Member of Congress; these hundreds of dollars paid for car fare, cab hire, and extra help could be dispensed with; Members working from ten to eighteen hours per day, including Sunday, as most do, would practically have nothing to do but attend committee meetings and sessions of Congress; and from five to twelve hours' work is all that would be required. I have made an estimate and believe that I have written more than 90,000 letters during my five years in Congress. Three-fourths of these letters have been pertaining to matters pending in the Departments. I have been in constant correspondence with nearly 1,100 soldiers in my district. Some of you probably have more applicants than I have. My distinguished friend and colleague [Mr. HEPBURN] has stated the proposition clearly, concisely, and exactly to the point, and unanswerably, and more ably than I can, in this language:

Here is a custom, grown up from the earliest days of the Republic, that makes the Member of Congress the means of communication in thousands and thousands of instances between the constituents interested and an executive department. They have no other agent here to represent them but ourselves. They frequently believe that they are the objects, or subjects, of maladministration or neglect. They believe that they have rights that are not observed. How natural it is under this custom to write to their Representative; and it is our pleasure to serve them. They know they have a friend here in him who will take an interest in their welfare and their withheld rights. How many thousands of times have your constituents written to you, gentlemen, that they have a claim before the Pension Bureau—a claim that has been neglected? Sometimes they will tell you that for ten years that claim has lain there unattended to, and urge upon you that time is flying fast with them; that they are approaching the end, and that if that claim is to have attention that will be beneficial to them, it must be now; and urge you in the name of humanity, in the name of good comradeship, in the name of old friendships and mutual kindnesses, as their Representative, to see to it that something is done in their behalf.

How often does it occur to them that they have furnished the proof that is abundant for the allowance of their claim? Their agent is hundreds of miles from the capital; they have no representative here but you. Are you to be denied the right to go to the Pension Office to examine these proofs, to say to the man that has it in charge—that perhaps has laid it away—that there is proof there that entitled the claimant to the affirmative action of the Government? How often does it happen that you are called upon to call attention of the Department to the fact that this statute is one that should have liberal construction rather than a narrow technical one that is often given to it? The officer has a judgment to render, and you urge him to do justice to your constituent. If the statements contained in this report are a violation of duty, if they indicate crime on your part, is not this other? What is the difference?

The requests of our constituents are many, very many. Requests for aid in securing action, or favorable action, on pending pension claims come to me in great numbers. There are thousands of them every year. There are requests concerning rural free delivery, additional clerk hire in post-offices, additional rents for post-offices, additional allowances for fuel and for lights, for information or services concerning public lands, Indian claims, patents, claims for money, for aid in procuring public employment, to aid in securing promotion for almost all conceivable things. Indeed, one constituent by letter asked me to submit for him a case in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Are these letters—I receive more than a thousand every month—to be thrown in the wastebasket? For my part, I strive to render the service if I can and write the result to my correspondent in all instances. I think, Mr. Speaker, that you could find but few persons in the Eighth Iowa district who would complain that their Representative either neglected his correspondents or was neglectful of their requests.

As has been stated by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, "they have no other agent here to represent them but ourselves, and how natural it is for them to write to us; and it is always a pleasure to serve them."

Are you going to deprive the soldiers of this country of the aid a Member can give them? The process of securing a pension is slow enough under the present rule. An inquiry sent to the Pension Bureau by a Member of Congress is answered promptly; the information is forwarded the claimant with your advice as to how to proceed. All claimants are not familiar with the pension laws, and I dare say that more confusion and delay is caused by confusing the evidence called for under the different laws than in any other manner; and in making these calls and writing the letters it is not for the purpose of exerting any influence; it is to aid the claimants to properly present their claims, and with a view that the case be adjudicated speedily, and the Bureau passes upon the claims upon their merits. What is true in the Pension Bureau is true in every other bureau and department of this Government.

If Members named in this report are guilty of wrongdoing or violating any rule or law, then every Member who has called or written a letter to the Pension Bureau urging consideration of a soldier's claim, regardless of merit, is equally guilty.

I have, as all of you have, many claimants who are impatient, and justly so, who think that their claims are not adjudicated as speedily as they might wish or expect; but what would become of them if they were to resort to the slow process of correspondence or through an attorney here in Washington? If, for instance, a soldier writes the Department his letter is answered in its regular order. Thousands of letters are received every day, and my understanding is that often it takes months before a reply is received. If he applies through an attorney here in Washington, this attorney has thousands of cases, and they are allowed to call for the papers in a case certain days in a week and for a certain number of cases.

I believe they are limited to one day per week, and not more than three cases in one day. I believe Wednesday is their day. If an attorney has 3,000 cases it would take 1,000 Wednesdays before the last case would be reached. Under the present system a Member sends a call slip usually a day or two in advance, the papers are made available for his personal inspection, and a Member or his secretary may examine the papers on file, and the claimant is advised what is required to complete his case and how to proceed, thus saving the Department a vast amount of work and expense in examining these cases for the claimants. Not only are cases thus more speedily reached and passed upon, but it is a large saving to the Government. In my humble efforts I have succeeded in having upward of 300 pensions allowed or increased. Many have been rejected. I certainly claim no credit of securing the allowance of a single one of these claims through my influence. They have been allowed by the Department because the evidence has warranted allowance, and if I deserve any credit it must be for doing my duty in advising and helping the claimant to complete his evidence, which would enable the Department to promptly dispose of the case.

During my five years in Congress I have received 220 petitions for the establishment of rural free delivery, and have written thousands of letters to the people in the district, giving them what information I could on the subject. I have written hundreds of letters and have made hundreds of calls to the Department, urging speedy and favorable consideration, and giving it such information as I could to aid it in properly and satisfactorily establishing the service. By the 15th of next month we will have about 180 of these routes in operation, serving, approximately, 18,000 families, distributing $108,000 per annum to the 180 rural carriers under the present salary, or $129,600 under the new salary proposed. Now, is this $129,000 to be charged up to me or to my district, as having been secured by fraud or undue influence simply because I have given my aid in securing the service as speedily as possible? I give a list of cases, with a statement of what action has been taken thereon, which was furnished me by the Department.

Of the above forty-three cases adversely reported about one-half have been reinvestigated, with a view of ascertaining, if possible, whether some changes can be made whereby they might be established, many of them coming within a few of the required number of patrons. The people who petitioned for this service are as worthy and deserving as are those who have been granted the service, but under the rule of the Department the service could not be granted. I have urged repeatedly that exceptions should be taken to this rule and that the service should be extended to these people. Some of these requests have been granted; I believe more will be granted; I hope they will. Is that a violation of law? If not, certainly the cases referred to in this report are not in violation of the law or rule, as will be shown by the record and correspondence. Not even a recommendation has been made by me except in the change in site of one small post-office.

My experience in the Post-Office Department has been the same as yours. During the rush for the rural-delivery service, thousands of applications being filed every month, with a force of less than fifty inspectors, each inspector disposing of from two to four cases per week, years rolled by before thousands of the cases could be reached. Your people, my people, became impatient on account of the long delay, and justly so. We were then all writing letters and calling at the Department. Often have I called when there would be twenty-five or more Members and Senators waiting at the Department to be heard, each urging speedy and favorable action upon applications filed by them. Could any Member with any consideration or respect for duty or his constituents decline to give his aid in securing this service? One of the most gratifying and pleasing Department communications received by me while in Congress was on February 10, showing that all but eight of the 220 applications filed by me had been investigated and reported; and to be advised that those eight had been referred to the special agent and were then being investigated.

In looking over this report I find that I am not reported calling as often as some Members, nor have I been as successful in securing increases in clerk hire and rent. In looking over the statement showing allowances for clerk hire not a single office in my district has been allowed a dollar in excess of the amount usually allowed, though I am reported as having called or written letters in two cases. I find in these two cases one has been reduced $60 per annum and one $40, but turning to the list of rural delivery routes in my district, I take it that star routes have been discontinued out of these offices, lessening the number of pieces of mail handled in transit, which probably accounts for the reduction of allowance. I am also reported as writing letters relative to change of site and rent. One at Kensett, where a lease was made for ten years for a part of a building in which I am a stockholder. The building referred to is a new modern $7,000 two-story brick building, with hot-water heat. The space occupied is one-third of the ground floor. The allowance is $200 for rent and heat.

In addition to this I believe there is an allowance of $20 for light, a total of $220 per annum, which is, according to this report, $57 less the usual allowance for an office of the $1,400 grade, which this office was, and is less than one-half of the maximum amount allowed, so I take it nobody will charge that any influence has been exerted in this case. The lease was made by the officers of the banking company; and when my attention was called to section 3739 I immediately went to the Post-Office Department to ascertain if a lease had been made; if so, to ask for a written opinion as to whether the contract had been lawfully entered into; if not, to have the lease canceled; and I will ask permission to have the written opinion inserted in the RECORD. It fully explains.

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1904.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
House of Representatives.

SIR: For your information I inclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed to-day to the First Assistant Postmaster-General, division of salaries and allowances, relative to the leasing of post-office premises at Kensett, Iowa.

Very respectfully,

C. H. ROBB,
Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department.

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 28, 1904.

The honorable the FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Division of Salaries and Allowances.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the papers connected with the leasing of the post-office at Kensett, Iowa, which were submitted in connection with an inquiry relative to the right of a company in which a Member of Congress is an officer to enter into contract with the United States.

The papers show that the Northwood Banking Company, Northwood, Iowa, G. N. HAUGEN, president, and the Kensett Bank, Kensett, Iowa, G. N. HAUGEN, president, are the lessors of the post-office at Kensett, Iowa. To the query, "State whether the above (the lessors) act or acts for himself or themselves, or as an officer or trustee, guardian, executor, attorney, etc., for others," propounded before the lease was agreed to, the answer was: "For themselves; not incorporated." I have further been advised that Mr. G. N. HAUGEN is a Member of Congress.

Section 3739, Revised Statutes, prohibits Members of Congress from contracting with the United States. An exception to this rule, however, is expressed in section 3740, Revised Statutes, which provides in part:

"Nothing contained in the preceding section shall extend or be construed to extend to any contract or agreement made or entered into or accepted by any incorporated company where such contract or agreement is made for the general benefit of such incorporation or company."

It is my opinion that the answer "not incorporated" referred to above means that the banks are not incorporated under the laws relating to State and savings banks. I am advised that banks can operate in Iowa without being incorporated under the special act referred to. Inasmuch as the Northwood Banking Company and the Kensett Bank have officers and are evidently organized the same as corporations, and the wording of section 3740, Revised Statutes, is broad enough to include an "incorporation or company," and the further fact that the benefits derived from this lease are for the use of the banks as institutions or companies, which is within the intent of the section, I am of the opinion that the Northwood Banking Company and the Kensett Bank can lawfully enter into the lease in question.

Very respectfully,

C. H. ROBB,
Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department.

In this case the report shows that the Department wrote the postmaster at Kensett, concerning contract for rent. She replied January 22, 1903, that she had seen the agent whom she rented the building of, and he informed her he would have to consult with Hon. G. N. HAUGEN before he could make out a contract. The agent referred to, I take it, is the cashier of the bank. I would say that I have been president of this bank for ten years or more. In matters of making large loans or in the lease or sale of real estate belonging to the bank it has always been the practice of the cashier to consult or refer such matters either to myself as president of the banks or the vice-president, Mr. K. Cleophas. In this case in my absence the matter was naturally referred to and disposed of by the vice-president, who submitted a proposal to the Department January 19, 1903, three days prior to the date of the letter referred to written by the postmaster at Kensett.

The other office referred to is the one at Strawberry Point, a small but thrifty town, with public-spirited, prosperous, and enterprising people, where a number of the leading citizens, out of pride and enterprise and to beautify their town, had taxed themselves some $15,000 or $20,000 for a modern and splendid hotel building. The office was formerly located in a small building, surrounded, I believe, by frame buildings and greatly exposed to danger of fire. Here was an opportunity to move the office into this new fire-proof building, centrally and conveniently located, heated by hot water, and having electric lights, I believe. An allowance of $250 per annum was made, the postmaster agreeing to pay $50 in addition to the stockholders of the building. The amount paid, I consider, is about one-half the rental value of the space occupied by the Government, but out of pride and for the good of the service these good people consented to lease the building for about half its rental value.

In the matter of change or purchase of sites I have invariably declined to make any recommendation, except at Strawberry Point, where it seemed to be universally desired on the part of the good people there that the change should he made, and where there was no question but that the change was for the best interests of the service. I have at times been severely criticised for not complying with requests of this kind, but I have always believed, and still believe, that the people living in a community are better judges and are better informed as to the situation, and every community should decide for itself; and if they are unable to agree upon a site, then an inspector should be sent there, who, if he does his duty, will consider the claims of all parties from an unbiased standpoint, and always with a view of subserving the best interests of the service and closely guarding the interests of this Government. And if the inspector violates that rule he is not a fit man to be employed by the Government. If he does violate this rule, the responsibility must be lodged somewhere else and not with Members of Congress.

And if under our present civil-service rules there is no way of discharging or getting rid of these men it is high time that we enact laws and rules that will make it possible to appoint officials giving some consideration to integrity, experience, and capacity for performing that service, that the business of this Government can be conducted along business lines.

I have received many requests to present the claims of people in my district, some for increase in clerk hire, some for increase of rent; in all cases I have insisted that a showing should be made, and after such showing was made I would cheerfully present the matter to the Department.

I have frequently called at not only the Pension Bureau and Post-Office Department, but at all of the Departments. I have been in constant correspondence with all of the Departments, persistently and conscientiously urging and demanding recognition for my district—my people—their claims. While I may not have made a profound impression upon them, or all of them. I have succeeded in some of my efforts. My district has been recognized in appointments in some of the Departments; soil surveys have been made; topographic maps of parts of my district have been made; a Government Weather Bureau station is to be located in my district; carloads of fish have been distributed in the streams and lakes, and so on. For doing this or a like plain duty you have attached the names of 185 of us in this report, coupling us with some supposed wrongdoers without a word of comment. And now, after these names have been published to the world, charged with violation of the law by the press, you come in on the floor and make a statement that you intended no wrong; that you believed none guilty, and that no harm could come from such report, as the record clearly vindicates the action of the 185 members out of 191 given in this report.

Would it not been just and proper and due every Member that this statement should have been made at the time of filing the report or to have had it incorporated in the report?

I have always endeavored to comply with all honorable and legitimate requests conscientiously and as promptly as possible. In my correspondence or personal calls at the Departments I have urged speedy and earnest consideration, presenting all claims on their merits, and urging that favorable action be taken thereon if found compatible with the duties of the Department.

I print from this report a synopsis of that part referring to myself, without offering any comments:

Statement showing allowances for clerk hire at third and fourth class post-offices, etc., in Iowa.

Post-office.	Salary of post-master.	Allowance for clerk hire.			Recommended by, and remarks.
		Former.	Present.	Excess.
Lansing	$1,400	$180	$120	----	Hon. G. N. HAUGEN.
Postville	1,300	100	70	----	Do.

NOTE.—Where no excess is shown the allowance was warranted at the time it was authorized.

KENSETT, IOWA.

The post-office at Kensett, Iowa, was advanced to the third class January 1, 1903, the salary of the postmaster being fixed at $1,400. On January 9 postmaster submitted an estimate that the expenses for rent and fuel would be $200 per annum. Across this is indorsed in pencil:

"200 agreed G. N. HAUGEN, M. C. G. W. B."

The allowance was fixed at $200 per annum, as appears from the following letter:

JANUARY 13, 1903.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN, House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to the matter of allowance for rent of post-office premises at Kensett, Iowa, I beg to advise you that it has been decided to allow the postmaster at the rate of $200 for rent, including fuel. The postmaster has been requested to submit an estimate for light.

Very respectfully,

____ ____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Under date of January 19, 1903, a proposal was submitted by the Northwood Banking Company and Kensett Bank to lease the premises occupied, with heat, for ten years, at $200 per annum, which was accepted. The following letter appears in the files:

KENSETT, IOWA, January 22, 1903.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

In reply to yours of recent date concerning contract for rent will say that I saw the agent that I rent of, and he informed me that he would have to consult with Hon. G. N. HAUGEN before he could make out a contract, as he is interested in the building.

Very respectfully,

MARY E. POISAL, Postmaster.

The lease queries show that the building in which the office is located was owned by the two banking companies above named, and G. N. HAUGEN is given as the president of each.

The lease was drawn on January 31, 1903, for a period of ten years from January 1, 1903, at $200 per annum.

See page 76 of the report.

I would state that the usual allowance for an office of the $1,400 grade is $277; for the $1,500 grade, $300, and for the $1,600 grade, $331 per annum for rent, fuel, and light.

Very respectfully,

____ ____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

STRAWBERRY POINT, IOWA.

At Strawberry Point, Iowa, where the salary of the postmaster was $1,100, the allowances up to July 1, 1902, were $100 for rent and $44 for fuel and light, a total of $144. On July 1, 1902, the allowance for rent was increased to $120.

On December 3, 1902, a communication from the postmaster asking permission to change the site of the office was transmitted to the Department by Hon. G. N. HAUGEN, his letter being as follows:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., December 3, 1902.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Post-Office Department.

DEAR SIR: I inclose you letter from the postmaster at Strawberry Point, Clayton County, Iowa, requesting permission to change site of his office, and I take pleasure in recommending favorable consideration.

Very truly,

G. N. HAUGEN.

The First Assistant Postmaster-General acknowledged receipt by letter dated December 5, 1902, in which he stated:

"I would state that if a change is authorized it will be on the basis of present allowance for rent, or only a slight increase."

The postmaster's reply stated that the annual rent for the proposed room would be $250, and that an allowance of $50 additional for fuel and light would be necessary. This was transmitted to the Department by Hon. G. N. HAUGEN, whose letter follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1903.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Post-Office Department.

DEAR SIR: I inclose you communication from Strawberry Point, Clayton County, Iowa, together with application for change of site of the post-office.

I am familiar with the situation there, and heartily concur with the postmaster and petitions in recommending a change. The site selected is centrally and conveniently located, and it would seem that a change from the old building to a new brick building, practically fireproof, would be desirable and wise, and would add to the betterment of the service and pride of the community.

Very truly,

G. N. HAUGEN.

The increased allowance was at once approved, as shown by the following letter:

JANUARY 5, 1903.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN, House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to the question of location of post-office at Strawberry Point, Iowa, I beg to advise you that the postmaster has this day been authorized to change site of office as petitioned for, on basis of $250 rent per annum.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The record and correspondence speak for themselves and vindicate any action on my part. I am ready and willing that every line written or received by me shall be printed. You can print it on the sky and turn on the searchlight in all Christendom, and I defy any man to point out a single word or syllable or act that is illegal or wrongful. I have no apology to make; I have given my services conscientiously and cheerfully, and as long as I remain in Congress I shall continue to do so without fear or hesitation; and I say to you and I say to every Department that from now on, as I have in the past, I will assert the rights of my district and people, whether it be in this House or in the Departments. My aim will be to secure justice for Democrats or Republicans, rich or poor, high or low, friend or foe, and to all regardless of party affiliation or religious creed.

My efforts will be to secure just recognition of the services and all just claims of not only all worthy and deserving soldiers who took their lives in their hands and laid them upon their country's altar as a sacrifice defending it, who fought that peace, progress, prosperity, happiness, honor, and dignity might prevail; but for every citizen, whether in the rural districts or towns.

Now, just a word more and I am done. Harsh words have been spoken, criticising members of this committee. I confess that at first I could not see why 185 of us should be included in this report.

As stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WADE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the leader on the Democratic side, both men who are always candid and honorable, and whom we all admire for their ability and integrity:

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the few men from my State who have not been regarded as entitled to honorable mention in this report, and as the sole Democrat from that State I deem it proper that I should call the attention of this body to my view of this report. I consider it, as some one has said, to be a very serious matter, and it is proper that we should ask ourselves two questions—What is it? and Why is it? As to the first, I want to say that so far as the great majority of the men named in this report are concerned there are no facts stated that would cause the slightest reflection upon their names or their integrity. The other gentlemen from my State are wrong politically, most of them are wrong on Canadian reciprocity, and some of them are suspected of disloyalty to the Iowa idea; but I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as the integrity of the men on the other side of this Chamber is concerned, the Representatives from my State stand above reproach. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, some one has designated this report as an indictment against those Members named. I deny the truth of that, and say it is an indictment against the Department which issued it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, gentlemen of the House, the Post-Office Department has put 150 of you upon a list, and sent your names out to the newspapers of the country under a heading of "Men charged with violations and irregularities"—charged with what the people understand to be criminality. There are not upon that list over six cases of violations of even technical law; but the names of the balance of you, not guilty even technically of anything, have been handed in with the others and appear here under this resolution. Now, is it time for you to examine them?

* * * * * * *

What was the motive? Was it not to give Congress notice that the Department had something held over Congress—that Congress had better let the Department alone? [Applause.]

Now, if there are not over six upon this list who are guilty of violations of even technical law, and the balance not guilty, even technically, certainly not morally or otherwise, I fail to see why we should appear in this report. And when I listen to the chairman of the committee, who drew this report, Mr. OVERSTREET, stating—

That the members unanimously believed that there was no impropriety or act of moral turpitude upon the part of any Member mentioned in all of those cases. And that the mere fact that a Member of the House had made a recommendation upon a proper request from one of his constituency, which took it to that division, would put no imputation upon him or his acts, simply because some officer who had been employed in that division had been guilty of either malfeasance or misfeasance in office, whether he had been merely removed or indicted and convicted upon his trial.

And when I hear him say, speaking of the committee:

We all agreed that the methods and practices pursued by Members are honorable and both in harmony and keeping with long-established custom—

And stating that—

In view of the fact that both of these situations relative to recommendations of clerk hire and rentals were not in violation of any law nor in any way improper to be recommended by Members, there could be no aspersion upon any Members any more than that aspersion which since Washington's day has unfortunately rested in the minds of narrow-minded people against all public officers of all stages and conditions.

I was at a still greater loss to know why our names should appear in this report; but when the gentleman made the statement that there were two alternatives open to the committee—the one pursued, or—that we report to this body that we had these papers before us, that we had gone through them, that we found nothing in them that warranted further investigation, that we did not believe there was any violation of law, that we did not believe any Member had been guilty of moral turpitude or improper conduct, and therefore, in view of that, we recommended that the resolution lie upon the table.

And that it was the unanimous—belief of the committee that a report recommending the appointment of an additional committee would itself carry to the House an imputation made by the Post-Office Committee, and believed by it to be true, that there were instances which warranted a further investigation as to the conduct of Members.

And that—

The committee, therefore, took the position that the House could only follow the rule which we have already agreed upon, that there is nothing to be concealed, nothing to be hidden; that we believe that there was no impropriety in these recommendations, and therefore would not add insult to injury by asking an investigation when we had before us facts which clearly demonstrated that such investigation would prove no more than we were in possession of already.

I believed the committee acted in good faith, and while I might question the propriety and the judgment of the committee, I want to give them credit for acting honorably and conscientiously.

While I fully appreciate the fact that quite often investigations are for political purposes and not always from a patriotic standpoint, not always inspired and promoted by the purest and highest sense of honor, sometimes through stupidity, sometimes through a burning desire of some unprincipled, degenerated being, permeated and dominated by evildoing, conceit, and deception, narrow-minded, possessed of the idea that by tearing down others their own ambitions can be realized and their own evil deeds can be covered up, I also appreciate the propriety, justice, and general purpose of investigations. In this case I believe that nothing good can come from any further investigation, nor do I believe that any Member of this House is guilty of wrongdoing, but in view of this report and the present situation I favor an investigation.

For my part you may go not only into the Post-Office Department and drag out correspondence in the musty files there, but you may go into the Pension Bureau, the Interior Department, the Treasury Department, Justice Department, State Department, War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Labor and Commerce, the Agricultural Department, the Smithsonian Institution. Go into the homes of 200,000 people in my district and you will find not only the two letters referred to in this report, but you will find, as before stated, more than 90,000 letters, not including circular letters, written by me. When you get through investigating Members of the House and Senate, investigate every nook and corner—garret to basement—every division and bureau of every Department of the Government in or outside of Washington.

Not that I believe that such investigation would disclose fraud; but I believe that every Department could be run more economically and on a better business basis, and that an investigation would give such additional light as would enable Congress to act more intelligently, and would bring about a reform that would result in a great saving to this Government.

I am one of those who believes that there is something radically wrong about the present adjustment of salaries. I can see no justice in paying some honest and efficient clerks here and a rural mail carrier only $600 per annum, who travels 25 miles or more every day of the week, rainstorm or sunshine, good or bad roads, furnishing his own horses and vehicle, equipping himself so as to promptly and efficiently carry on the service, providing himself with subsistence, feed for his horses, while for services here in Washington decrepit and superannuated clerks are furnished a warm room in the winter, a cool room with electric fan in the summer, soft-cushioned chairs, and are paid $1,000 or more per annum for doing practically nothing; and if he is detailed for duty outside of Washington, or sent abroad on some duty or pretext of duty, he is allowed from three to seven dollars per day for subsistence and his traveling expenses.

If the statement repeatedly made on the floor of this House is true, and it can not be disputed, it comes from high authority—from Members who have had occasion to investigate the matter—that we have more than 20 per cent of deadwood in the Departments, it is high time, gentlemen, that some action should be taken to bring about some reform, and that the $750,000,000 appropriated annually might be expended more judiciously and advantageously.

I will append to my remarks a tabulated statement showing appropriations made for the fiscal years 1875 to the present time, covering a period of thirty years, giving the amount appropriated and for what purpose it was appropriated, aggregating $13,055,956,050.43.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

[Mr. DOUGHERTY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time have we left on our side?

The SPEAKER. Twelve minutes on a side.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WADE].

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the few men from my State who have not been regarded as entitled to honorable mention in this report, and as the sole Democrat from that State I deem it proper that I should call the attention of this body to my view of this report. I consider it, as some one has said, to be a very serious matter, and it is proper that we should ask ourselves two questions—What is it? and Why is it? As to the first, I want to say that so far as the great majority of the men named in this report are concerned, there are no facts stated that would cause the slightest reflection upon their names or their integrity. The other gentlemen from my State are wrong politically, most of them are wrong on Canadian reciprocity, and some of them are suspected of disloyalty to the Iowa idea; but I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as the integrity of the men on the other side of this Chamber is concerned, the Representatives from my State stand above reproach. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, some one has designated this report as an indictment against those Members named. I deny the truth of that, and say it is an indictment against the Department which issued it; because there is not a single instance noted wherein there has been an increase which was unwarranted, at the request of a Member of this body, in which the Department does not convict itself of one of two things. Either that, because they wanted to grant a favor or to give flattery to the Member making the application, they violated the law or the rules of the Department, or else, on the other hand, an increase which was not warranted was granted through the grossest negligence on the part of the parties in charge of the Department. Therefore I say that instead of it being an indictment against the Members, it is an indictment against the Department, and the Department ought to be put upon trial upon the indictment without delay.

My theory of this matter is that there is no Member that can go out of this Chamber and meet his constituent upon the street and tell him why there was not an investigation of the Department ordered. I say there is not a Member upon this floor that can answer him, because there is but one of two answers. Either, first, there is nothing wrong in that Department, or, second, the investigation already conducted by the Department itself is sufficient. As to the first, I say the country knows there is something wrong in that Department; the country knows that it is rotten. As to the second, I say that this report in itself blasts every hope of a successful and a thorough investigation by the Department of its own wrong. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, that the "lid should be taken off" right now and these charges should be investigated, and that the men who made these illegal and improper allowances should be compelled to explain why it is that they responded, even to the urgent request of Members of this House, and why they themselves violated the law which Congress enacted or the rules which they themselves made. Nothing else will answer. No other action will respond to the demands of the people of this country except a full, fair, and honest investigation. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts five minutes.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, through no fault or favor on my part my name is not associated with the other 150 Members of this House on what has been termed the "black list." Up in my district, being Republican, and I being known as a Democrat, I was not tempted. In the first place, there are no postmasters of my faith, and in the second, it would be utterly useless for any postmaster to ask me to secure an increase of his salary or of his clerk hire or rental of office; my recommendation would insure rejection. Now, in the minute or two I have I want to call the attention of the House to this report of Mr. Bristow to the Postmaster-General, which was filed during last November, in which Mr. Bristow very modestly says that "the system of organized corruption which has been disclosed began in 1893 and continued until stopped by this investigation." If I believed that to be the fact I would not vote for any further investigation; but I believe, Mr. Speaker, that instead of being stopped by this investigation the investigation has simply scratched upon the surface, and that there is far more underneath and unearthed which ought to be brought to the light.

I believe that we should vote for an investigation of the Post-Office Department and plow up the strata from the bottom instead of scratching a little upon the top and attempt to direct public attention to the acts of Congressmen in recommending some little advance in clerk hire, etc.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, it occurs to me, is simply in the same category with the rest of the people whose names he has caused to be spread broadcast throughout the country. If there is anything wrong in this recommendation he is equally guilty and subject to criticism. He is in no position to call the kettle black.

On January 27, 1899—

It will be found at the bottom of page 31, relative to the post-office at Erie, Kans., there is this information:

On January 27, 1899, Hon. J. L. Bristow, inclosed a letter from the postmaster, requesting that his allowance for separating-clerk hire be increased from $120 to $180, stating that he would be very glad if the postmaster could be given the allowance requested by him.

And upon February 25 he evidently got what he wanted for his postmaster at Erie, as appears from the report, as follows:

February 25, 1899, Mr. Bristow was informed that "it has been decided, in view of your wishes and the figures submitted by the postmaster, to increase the annual allowance for clerk hire at Erie, Kans., from $120 to $180, effective July 1, 1899." This increase was made notwithstanding the report furnished by the postmaster, dated February 19, 1899, showed that he was only entitled to $50.

On the top of the next page, page 32, it reads as follows:

On February 25, 1899, Mr. Bristow was informed shat "it had been decided, in view of your wishes and the wishes submitted by the postmaster, to increase the annual allowance for clerk hire at Erie, Kans., from $120 to $180."

I leave out for the time the next two lines and will include them in my remarks. It turned out that afterwards it showed by an investigation that that office was entitled to only $50. Now, in 1893, June 27, when the investigation was about to take place, this clerk hire was reduced to $50, as appears in the report, as follows: On June 27, 1903, the allowance for clerk hire was reduced to $50, effective July 1, 1903, the same being based on a report submitted to this office by the Railway Mail Service. Mr. Bristow, out in Kansas—Erie—where he wanted to do something in 1899, as appeared on the thirty-first page, for a friend, for a postmaster of his town, recommended an increase to $180, where the law allowed only $50. That postmaster had probably been just recently appointed to take the place of some Democrat there. Mr. Bristow wanted to do just what he finds fault with the Members of this House for doing—the Members having been anxious to do for their constituents—namely, to increase the salary or clerk hire of some postmasters in their districts, and after he had had a new revelation, or was attempting to make a reputation for himself, on June 27, 1903, he reduced it to $50.

I doubt if there is an increase of a greater percentage than appears in this case—not even made upon the request of Mr. Bristow.

Now, my friends, it seems to me that the only thing we can do in order that we may get at the bottom of this fraud and graft matter and find out who down here in the Post-Office Department is corrupt and who is not, if there are any, even more open to criticism than Members of this House, is to pass a resolution to investigate the Post-Office Department as well as to investigate ourselves, and unless that is done the country will never believe but what we were afraid that in that investigation something would come out which was not desired. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, after the gentleman from Indiana has used the time allotted to him I will then offer for the consideration of the House the resolution provided for by the order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman has completed his time?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. My time has been finished.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] who addressed the House have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I now yield six minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, the House has become in a somewhat agitated and excited condition of mind, and I trust before it acts upon this important question that it will seek to regain its normal poise and the steadiness and sanity which ordinarily characterize its proceedings. The striking feature of the peculiar situation in which the House is now placed grows out of the fact that we have set in motion a method of procedure which, in order to be followed without grave injury, should be followed to the end.

Either those delicate questions affecting the honor of Members should never have been touched by us at all, or they should be settled by the most effective action that it is within the power of the House to take. I intended to review the course of affairs here, but I can not do that in the limited time allotted to me, but one thing is apparent from the different steps that the House has taken: We have, in fact, had an investigation, an ex parte investigation purely, without any chance for the Members to be heard.

The head of the Department from which emanated the imputations affecting the membership of the House, in response to an inquiry from the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, sent here a great mass of material, some of it responsive, a great deal of it unresponsive; and that material affecting 150 Members has been spread upon the records of the House and a good deal of it has been printed in the press of the country. Now, sometimes the very occasion will slander a man.

If a Member here had been accused of going to the War Department or to the Pension Department in connection with a pension—and there is no harder trodden path to the National Treasury than exists through the Pension Office—it would have been regarded as a part of his duty, but when anything is said about a Member, when a mere whisper is uttered about a Member to-day in connection with the Post-Office Department, there is such a condition of the public mind that that whisper will reverberate from one end of the country to the other.

I confess I have heard with a great deal of amazement the proposition that the question affecting the honor of Members of this House should be dangled, should be dragged as the wretched tail to the kite of a general investigation of the Post-Office Department. Gentlemen say those connected with the Post-Office Department are thieves and criminals, and yet they seriously ask this House of Representatives to tie up an inquiry into the rectitude of its membership with a general investigation of that Department, which may drag on for months and in the end, whatever may be found about any given Member, will be buried under a great mass of testimony.

Mr. Speaker, I think that that policy is altogether unwise. It is our clear duty first to wash our own dirty linen, if we have any, before we undertake the laundry business for others. What weight will our investigation of others have while we ourselves are surrounded by an atmosphere of accusation and calumny impregnates the very air we breathe? It is the duty of the House first to dispose of those charges which impugn its own integrity, and until that shall be done no action that the House shall take will receive that credit from the American people which it deserves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak upon this question at greater length. I have not time to say the things that I rose to say, but if opportunity is presented me, when it shall come in order, I will offer the motion which I now ask to have the Clerk read.

Mr. POU. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MCCALL. This reading will take up the balance of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCCALL, of Massachusetts, moves to commit the pending report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and all accompanying papers and communications contained in House Report No. 1395 so far as the same relate to Members of the House, to a select committee of seven, to be appointed by the Speaker, with instructions to consider said report and said papers and communications so far as they relate to Members and the origin of the said papers and communications, and that said select committee be authorized fully to investigate the same, to hear Members and other persons named in said report and any officials of the Post-Office Department in respect to matters affecting Members of the House contained in said report, papers, and communications, and as soon as may be to report to the House the result of said investigation, and that said select committee is authorized to examine witnesses on oath, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and to [employ such clerical assistance as may be necessary and have such printing done as the needs of the committee may require].

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, at the most interesting moment in the House I ever have seen during my twenty years of service, in the Fifty-first Congress, when the House was more impregnated with hysteria, if possible, than at this present moment, when a whole party was hurling epithets of opprobrium on the Speaker, I remember that the late Speaker Reed calmly said: "A greater man than any that sits in this Hall once said that no man can write down another except himself."

These words have come to me during the excitement of this debate. I decline to become hysterical: I have declined to have any apprehension about this report, so far as I am concerned. I have no personal explanation to make now. I have no questions of privilege to state. I have no apology to make, because I know that, whatever may be written in that report, no man can write me down except myself. [Applause.]

What shall we do with this report? What shall we do with this question before the House? Some gentlemen have indulged in violent denunciations; they have called names. The entire Democratic side of the House have shouted, "Let's investigate the whole Department!" Gentlemen, it is no answer for me to any accusation to say to another man, and especially to the accuser, "You are another." That does not answer the question even to my own intelligence, or to the intelligence of the American people. What shall we do? The committee say, Lay the resolution on the table. I hope that motion will be voted down, and after that is done I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] will introduce his resolution to investigate this report; to investigate every man named in that report by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General; to investigate the questions as to who made the report and how it came into the House. All this can be done under that resolution, and I hope it will not be mixed up with any other matter. This is the question before us. This is the paramount question before this House of Representatives.

Members are named in the report. Newspapers have named Members throughout the country and coupled their names with admitted rascals, and even have gone so far as to call some Members of the House rascals. But that language of the newspapers is but the wind that blows to and fro, and injures no man's character if he has a character to be injured. [Applause.]

You can afford to stand upon the character you have made. Bring out the facts before this committee: let it send for persons and papers—they have the authority under the statute to swear the witnesses—and let us get at the facts and send them to the country. "A whitewashing report?" Why, gentlemen, if the facts are against you, you can not whitewash them in a report. Let us give the country the facts, no matter what the opinion of this committee may be. It must stand the sense and judgment of the people of the United States, and if the facts exonerate, if the facts vindicate, vindication you will have: and if any man can not stand upon the record he has made, so much the worse it may be for that man.

Gentlemen on the other side ask for an investigation of the Department. The Department has been investigated; the rascals have been found. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] And now, gentlemen, if you have any facts to present as to why it should be further investigated, why in the name of common sense have you not presented them instead of howling for an investigation?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Give us the tribunal to present them to.

Mr. PAYNE. Where are your facts on which to found the indictment? You have not been able to present any so far. Why, it looks a good deal to the people of the United States as though you wanted an investigation to drag along all through the summer without a word of politics in it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Speaker will appoint the committee, and your committee need not drag it out unless it wants to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. OVERSTREET, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the resolution (H. Res. 118) providing for a committee of the House to investigate charges in relation to the conduct of the Post-Office Department be taken up for consideration on Wednesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal; that three hours' general debate be allowed, the time to be equally divided between the two sides and to be controlled by Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. MOON of Tennessee; at the end of which time the minority shall have leave to offer an amendment, subject to a point of order, and that after disposition of the amendment the question shall be taken on the motion that the resolution do lie on the table. (Order made in the House March 7, 1904.)

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by substituting the following:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of the House, to investigate the conduct and administration of the Post-Office Department; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer and all necessary clerks, to have the power to sit during the sessions of the House and exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of all frauds and irregularities alleged to exist in said Department, including alleged frauds, irregularities, illegalities, and improprieties by Members of Congress in connection with said Department, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be reported at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of this House, to investigate the conduct and administration of the Post-Office Department; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer and all necessary clerks, to have the power to sit during the sessions of the House and exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of all frauds and irregularities alleged to exist in the said Department, including alleged frauds, irregularities, illegalities, and improprieties by Members of Congress in connection with said Department, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Against that amendment, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not germane to the resolution pending and not privileged.

The SPEAKER. To that the gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that it is not germane and is not privileged.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a body like the House of Representatives makes its own rules. A body like the House of Representatives can unmake all of its rules or any of its rules in whole or in part, for a session or for an occasion. The House can do it; the Senate does do it every day.

On the other side of the Capitol the Senators every day, upon appeal from the decision of the Chair upon a point of order, express the will of the Senate upon the question of getting at the very right and the very justice of a situation behind the outward seeming of technical parliamentary law. The House has just as much right to unmake any one of its rules for the purpose of reaching the real right of a parliamentary situation upon a particular question as it has to unmake the rule for the session, for a week, for a day, or for any other time—just as much right as it has to make a special rule through the instrumentality of the Committee on Rules.

The country will not misunderstand this situation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has made the point of order, because after the Republican rulers of this body, and after, perhaps, the President of the United States himself had been consulted—at least so says the public press—it was thought best for the Republican party not to have an investigation of the Post-Office Department "before the election." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman from Mississippi is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself to the germaneness of this proposition——

The SPEAKER. One moment——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And I think I can prove to the Chair that the proposition is germane.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] suggests, in the nature of a point of order, that the gentleman from Mississippi is not speaking to the point of order. Discussions of points of order are always in the discretion of the Chair. The Chair trusts that the gentleman, who knows what is in order, will proceed in order. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has made the point that this amendment is not germane and that it is not privileged. I am going to prove that it is at least germane. I can argue that, can I not? Here is a charge from the Post-Office Department that one hundred and some odd men upon this floor, of whom I do not happen to be one, have been guilty of illegalities; some of them of improprieties; some of them of undue and over influence. Members upon this floor have arisen and have not only charged but have proved that the Post-Office Department was guilty of suppression of letters, suppression of documents, suppression of truth. Is it not, therefore, germane to a proposition while investigating Members for what they have been charged with to go further and investigate the character, veracity, and competency of the Post-Office Department and its employees, who have been guilty, while making the charges, of suppressing the truth, of suppressing documents that were in the same file as other documents which they have sent here, briefed upon the outside of the file, so that all the world had notice? Is it not germane to a proposition to "investigate," when the integrity of Members has been questioned in a certain quarter, to investigate also the veracity, truthfulness, character, and responsibility of the sources whence the questioning has come?

Ah, Mr. Speaker, the Chair may rule—and if the Chair does rule he will do so because the Chair, under the responsibilities of the Speaker's position when a question of parliamentary law is put to him, thinks he is right in ruling that way—he may rule that this question is out of order because not privileged; but the country knows, the world knows, and you know that you have the power and the right, upon appeal from the decision of the Chair, to make it in order. The Chair rules subject to the will of the House on appeal from his decision. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, are you going to make an investigation in order or not? Are you going to put yourself in this laughable position, that you pass a resolution enabling such Congressmen as desire to be investigated to come in and be investigated, and then allow the Post-Office Department to continue investigating you whom, according to you, are unjustly charged, while you decline to investigate the Post-Office Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I again suggest that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the Chair rule that I am out of order again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not ruled that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the Chair leaves it to "the gentleman" himself, "the gentleman" will say that he was out of order, so as to save the Chair the trouble.

The SPEAKER. There is a point of order pending. The Chair states again——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have said all I wish to upon the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the rule is so well established that I think it unnecessary to call the attention of the Chair to the decisions where the matter has been decided. The precedents are numerous.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, is there any further time on this side for the discussion of the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he is advised.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wanted to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Chair will indulge me a moment on the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to consume your time, or the time of the House, in a careful discussion of the point of order, but I rise for the purpose of making to the Chair a suggestion which I hope he may adopt, which if it seems to him proper to be adopted he will adopt, I think.

It is that, instead of formally ruling upon this point of order, the Speaker do as very many of his predecessors did in the time past, submit the question to the House, to let it determine for itself, with regard to this particular matter, what shall be the rule of our procedure.

The proposition is one for general investigation, for such an investigation that when it is concluded, if the Speaker appoint, as I believe he will, a good committee of investigation, will be satisfying to the country as to all the facts involved; will be a vindication of those who ought to be vindicated and a condemnation of those who ought to be condemned.

If the Speaker should decide this question and decide it adversely to the regularity of this resolution, merely as a parliamentary question, he would prejudice the matter somewhat, no doubt, before the House, but I think not before the country. It might be that Members of the House who would be glad to have this investigation and who would not vote against it might feel constrained, if the Speaker were to rule this resolution out of order, to vote to sustain the ruling. That would be in effect, as the country undoubtedly will understand it, and gentlemen now must understand it, to vote against an investigation. Now, to vote against a full investigation and to deny it will be to decide for a partial investigation by a committee of the House, with sole reference to Members of the House. The country will understand that to be an investigation predestined and prejudged to be a whitewashing investigation; and instead of relieving anybody from anything that may have been cast upon him by this Post-Office Department report, it will be a deepening of the stamp, and will but increase his embarrassment.

I will not consume further time here under existing circumstances; but I hope the Speaker will see proper to submit this question to the judgment of the House itself, untrammeled and unhampered by any ruling which he might make upon it as a mere technical parliamentary question, so that the House may get at the deep, important issue whether there shall or shall not be a thorough investigation of the whole matter, with reference to everybody and everything involved. I hope that the Speaker will accept in good part and will act upon the suggestion which I have offered. I have no doubt, of course, that the Speaker would readily rule upon any question presented, and am sure that he would not endeavor to escape from any responsibility cast upon him; but, under the circumstances, I think the Speaker would be evading no duty, would be shirking no responsibility, by committing to this body itself, without embarrassment, the question whether this investigation shall be made full, to get the whole truth, or shall be partial and crippled. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] a moment ago made a most astonishing declaration to this House. He said that this House at any time had the right, on a question of appeal, to make its own rules. Does the gentleman mean——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I said it had the right to change its own rules, and I will ask the gentleman this question in response to his: Does not the Senate do that every day? And has not the Senate the same rule on the subject as we have? And has not Parliament done the same thing for years?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know whether the Senate does every day what the gentleman says; but I know that the House of Representatives does not do it. [Applause.] The House of Representatives is governed by a code of its own—a code that prescribes the orderly procedure under which it shall perform its business. That orderly procedure is prescribed by the rules of the House. Our code, among other things, provides how the rules may be amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me one other question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did not the gentleman vote to override the ruling of Speaker Reed in connection with the Nicaragua Canal?

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly I did vote to override the ruling of the Chair—not of Speaker Reed; but I would have done so if he had made the ruling. The ruling to which the gentleman refers was a ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. I believed that the Chairman, in making that ruling, was in error; I believed it was an improper ruling. And my conscience fully approves the action which I then took, and which, under the rules, I had then the right to take.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Was not the gentleman one of those who voted to overrule Speaker Henderson——

Mr. HEPBURN. I did so vote——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. When all of us admitted that, as a mere matter of parliamentary law, the Speaker was right?

Mr. HEPBURN. I so voted, not for the purpose of changing the rules, but because I believed, as did those who voted with me, that the Speaker had improperly interpreted the rule. That was the ground of my action.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not speaking about the ruling in that case, but in the reciprocity case.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, I remember that. And I would so vote again.

Mr. DALZELL. It was the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that made the ruling—not the Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not now remember whose ruling it was, but in my judgment it was erroneous, and therefore I voted, under the rules, that it should not stand as the judgment of the House.

Mr. Speaker, what is involved in the philosophy of an appeal from the ruling of the Speaker? A proposition is made. The gentleman from Indiana in his place says that under the rules of this House that motion ought not to be entertained. The Speaker sustains that point of order. An appeal is taken. What then is the question? Has the Speaker correctly interpreted the rules of this House? Shall the decision of the Speaker stand as the judgment of the House? That is the question. Not, Has the House the right at any time to change a rule in this improper way, without regard to the methods prescribed for changing the rules? That never was suggested, to my knowledge, by any other man than the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit another interruption, I will say that I have very high political authority for going further. In the Fifty-first Congress Mr. Reed took the position that he had the right to make rules until Congress had made them, and that when the House afterwards made them, if they indorsed his action, that was all right.

Mr. HEPBURN. The case then presented was entirely different from the present. Then no rules had been adopted. Now we have a code of rules. But no one ever claimed that Speaker Reed or anyone else had the right in this way and under these circumstances, in opposition to the language of the existing rules, to make rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. He took the position that whatever the House chose to sanction became thereby the rule.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, what Mr. Reed held in the Fifty-first Congress was that the House, having failed to adopt a code of rules, was under general parliamentary law; and the affairs of the House were administered, not under rules made by Mr. Reed, but under general parliamentary law as interpreted by Mr. Reed and by the House. I am unwilling that the position of the gentleman from Mississippi shall go unchallenged.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me call attention to another fact. The gentleman from Mississippi, by the very proposition that he has made—that we have the right now and that here is the emergency where it should be exercised to make our rules—has confessed that under the rules as he expects them to be interpreted the Speaker is right and is simply administering existing rules that the gentleman proposed in his disorderly way to change.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). And it seems to me that it can not be maintained for a single moment. We either have rules or we do not. If we have rules, then we all know how we can change them. The method is prescribed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman submit to another interruption? I hate to interrupt him.

Mr. HEPBURN. I see that you do. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But I want the gentleman to understand my position.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think I do understand it. The gentleman was quite outspoken.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not think you do, because if you did you would not imagine for one moment that I would be so lacking in intellectual integrity as to pretend that this amendment is privileged, and therefore not obnoxious to the second point of order. What I have said is this: That the House is the master of its rules, and its rules are not the masters of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct. The House is master of its rules, and the House has prescribed by a rule that it had the right to make, and it is the duty of the Speaker te enforce, just how these rules shall be amended. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Having offered the amendment, I wish to be heard on the point of order. This is a privileged resolution, and I conceded in argument a day or two ago, as a matter of parliamentary law, that the proposition for a general investigation could not with propriety come up singly and alone on a specially privileged resolution. I said further that if the point of order were made upon the resolution presented in that way, and the Speaker sustained it, I would not be willing on appeal to vote to overrule the Speaker. I say so yet; but the Speaker will observe that the amendment now proposed by me is not along the line of the amendment discussed in its entirety a day or two since. In the proposed amendment, incorporated with it, made a part of it, inseparably connected with it, is a proposition not merely for the investigation of the Department, but for the investigation of the alleged frauds, irregularities, and improprieties of the membership of this House connected with that Department.

This proposition, I insist, being interwoven as it is with the whole question of investigation of the Department and the conduct of the House in reference to the Department, is in order. You can not, with the facts before us, investigate that Department without going into this House, without looking into the facts alleged against the membership of this House. You can not proceed with a general investigation without investigating privileged matters. You can not investigate fully privileged matters without investigating departmental matters fully. The questions are one, the same, and inseparable; in fact, under the form of the amendment, Mr. Speaker, there may be doubt about the question. I am not entirely free to say that I have not some doubt about the question in a strictly technical application of the House rules; but under the circumstances existing, with the charges made as they are, with the doubt that exists about the question, I think that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] made a good suggestion to relieve the Chair of the decision and allow the House to assume the responsibility and decide it.

If the Chair, however, feels called upon to make a decision, I believe that it comes within the purview of sound law and logic to overrule the point of order and permit this question to come before the House. It is certainly a case where the doubt should be resolved in favor of integrity and not crime. I do not agree that it is right to overrule the Chair when the Chair is right, but I do insist always on a question of grave doubt of this character that it is for the public good to defy the Chair and overrule the Speaker in order to protect the honor of the Commonwealth. [Applause.] Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I can not approve a technical decision of this question. It involves all that is sacred to every honorable man on this floor connected with these charges. It involves a great Department. It involves the national honor. You have made, gentlemen, the point of order. This black shield to your party's corruption is raised. You are about to sustain it. It is your effort to avoid exposure. When this struggle to protect your party from the disgrace it has earned is ended and you return to your homes and recall your conduct here, no point of order will soothe your stricken consciences. And when you behold the stain you have fixed on your country's honor you will fully realize in the bitterness of your meditations—

> That life is but a word, a shadow, a melting dream,
> Compared to essential eternal honour.

[Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—— [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. While the Chair is ready to rule, the Chair will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I only want a moment to say that in my judgment the motion made by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is germane to the pending resolution. The resolution pending, offered by the gentleman from Virginia, which it is proposed to lay on the table, provides for an investigation of the Members of this House; and the charge is made that they have violated the law by having illegal contracts made with the Post-Office Department. That is the charge.

Mr. Speaker, if that is true the Post-Office Department has committed the same fraud or is a party to the same fraud. The Post-Office Department has violated the law just as the Member violated it. It was impossible for a Member of this House to have violated the statute in contracting with the Post-Office Department unless the Department or the officer representing the Post-Office Department did not at the same time violate the law. This resolution of the gentleman from Virginia contemplates an investigation, not simply of the violation of the law by the Member himself, but also of the violation of the law by the Postmaster-General or his representatives. The investigation of the unlawful act on the part of the Member necessarily investigates the Department.

Mr. Speaker, if we are called upon to make an investigation under the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, we investigate not only the irregularities and the unlawful acts and conduct of a Member, but the irregularities and unlawful acts and conduct of the Postmaster-General or his representatives. You can not escape from that, and under this resolution the substitute provides simply for an extension of the investigation of the Postmaster-General or his subordinates.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for any human intellect to separate the two questions, so intimately and closely do they inhere and incorporate themselves into each other, and to say that the latter resolution, offered by my colleague from Tennessee, is not germane to the pending resolution. It simply broadens and extends its objects and purposes, and is along the same line, a portion of the same thing, and must be germane. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers the amendment which has been reported at the Clerk's desk. It provides for a general investigation of the conduct and administration of the Post-Office Department, and also coupled with it an investigation as to the action of Members of Congress touching matters referred to. To this amendment the gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, first, that it is not germane; second, that it is not privileged, or, to put it in another way, that even if it were germane he makes the point that it couples a nonprivileged matter with a privileged matter. The question before the House is a matter of such high privilege touching the dignity of the House and the integrity of Members in their representative capacity that it displaces all other business. The gentleman from Virginia this morning called for the regular order, although matters made privileged by the rules were ready for the consideration of the House, and that demand for the regular order postponed those privileged matters because this is a question of the highest privilege. Otherwise it could not be here.

Some weeks ago the gentleman from Virginia rose in his place to a question of privilege. Gentlemen will recollect that he then had a nonprivileged matter coupled with his question of privilege, and the Chair, sustained by the House, held that the resolution first offered was subject to the point of order because, while part of it represented a question of privilege, a part of it did not, and the decisions that the Chair then referred to by Mr. Speaker Carlisle, by Mr. Speaker pro tempore BLACKBURN, of Kentucky, and others, are within the recollection of the House. The Chair will refer to those briefly again. The gentleman offered the resolution embodied in the report, which I need not take the time of the House to again read, free from the nonprivileged matter, and the House sent that resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. That committee reports back with the recommendation that that resolution (known as the Hay resolution) do lie upon the table. Pending the vote on laying that privileged resolution upon the table, by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Tennessee, under the special order, offers this amendment. First, is it germane? Clause 7, Rule XVI, is as follows:

> And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

What is the question under consideration? A question of the highest privilege touching the relations of the Members of this House to certain matters referred to in the report from the Post-Office Department. This amendment proposed to investigate the Post-Office Department generally, not only as to matters relating to Members of this House, but as to a wide variety of matters having no reference whatever to the Members of this House. A bare reading of the rule shows that the proposed amendment embodies a subject different from that under consideration. The Chair may insert, with the permission of the House—he will not take the time to read it—an extract from an opinion of Mr. Speaker Carlisle in construing this same rule, in which he gave the history of the rule and the practice of the House of Representatives heretofore. It is an exceedingly clear opinion, like most of the opinions of Mr. Speaker Carlisle. The extract follows:

> The Congress of the Confederation, in 1781, adopted a rule in the following words:
> "No new motion or proposition shall be admitted under color of amendment as a substitute for a question or proposition under debate until it is postponed or disagreed to."
> The House of Representatives of the First Congress, on the 4th of March, 1789, adopted the following rule upon this subject:
> "No new motion or proposition shall be admitted under color of amendment as a substitute for the motion or proposition under debate."
> It will be observed that each of these rules admitted amendments introducing new motions or propositions if they were not offered as substitute for the motion or proposition under debate. But in March, 1822, the House changed the rule of 1789 so as to make it read as follows:
> "No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment."
> And in this form the rule has stood ever since, and now constitutes a part of the seventh clause of Rule XVI in the recent revision. The rule does not prohibit a committee reporting a bill from embracing in it as many different subjects as it may choose, but after the bill has been reported to the House no different subject can be introduced into it by amendment, whether as a substitute or otherwise.
> When, therefore, it is objected that a proposed amendment is not in order because it is not germane, the meaning of the objection is simply that it (the proposed amendment) is a motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration. This is the test of admissibility prescribed by the express language of the rule.

Now, if it be germane and proper under the rules to couple a nonprivileged matter with a privileged matter, let us inquire a minute where it would lead the House. If this amendment to investigate the Post-Office Department is germane, an amendment to investigate the postal service is germane. If this is germane, an amendment to investigate the Interior Department or the Treasury Department would be germane. Any conceivable question connected with the Executive would be germane. If this be germane, whenever a Representative in a House of almost 400 Members desired to inaugurate an investigation touching any matter he need only make his motion so as to make it privileged, and then you could tack on all matters nonprivileged and nongermane, and the House, in the transaction of its business, would cease to be an orderly body, and would run lawless.

The Chair has a number of decisions here.

As early as 1827 a Speaker who occupied this Chair for four terms—Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia—held that an amendment commanding tariff revision was not germane to a resolution giving a committee power to investigate tariff subjects. In later days Mr. Speaker Carlisle construed the rule with equal strictness, and held that a proposition to investigate the affairs of the New Orleans Cotton Exposition was not germane to a proposition to pay the indebtedness of that exposition.

But the Chair is not confined to reasonings on general principles. The particular question involved has been settled before, and the Chair may follow a broad and well-beaten pathway.

Questions precisely similar arose in the Forty-eighth Congress, and there are found in sections 1078 and 1079 of the Parliamentary Precedents well-considered rulings, one by Mr. Speaker Carlisle and the other by Mr. J. C. S. BLACKBURN, of Kentucky, as Speaker pro tempore, wherein it is specifically held that a privileged proposition may not be amended by adding thereto matter not privileged or germane to the original question. The reasonableness and justice of these rulings have not been questioned in twenty years.

Under the Constitution the House makes rules for its government. The House elects the Speaker who presides over the body. The House determines and construes the rules when a question is properly presented before him; but with a line of precedents running for almost a century, whoever might occupy the chair would, in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, act the coward if he did not call the attention of the House to the precedents touching the germaneness of this and similar amendments. The grouping together of privileged and n nprivileged matters is contrary to all rule, and has been so held by all occupants of this chair, so far as the Chair has been enabled to find himself, and after availing himself of advice from one who perhaps has a better knowledge of the precedents than any other man within the sound of my voice. [Applause].

Therefore the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order, first, that the amendment is not germane, and, second, that it is in the teeth of the rule that prohibits the linking together of privileged and nonprivileged matters.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, from the ruling of the Chair I appeal.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Indiana moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. GRIGGS. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 126, answered "present" 8, not voting 95, as follows:

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CASSINGHAM, and I desire to withdraw my vote.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. VAN VOORHIS, and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Shall the resolution lie upon the table?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. PADGETT. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PADGETT. Would the Chair entertain a motion to suspend the rules and vote upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not entertain such a motion because he could not under the rules entertain it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, then I ask unanimous consent that the rules be suspended and the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee be voted upon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order. As many as are in favor of the proposition that the resolution do lie upon the table will say "aye;" those opposed, "no."

The question being taken, the motion was rejected.

Mr. MCCALL and Mr. HAY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HAY. I rise for the purpose of being recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I make the point of order——

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads having reported that the resolution introduced by myself lie on the table, and the House having refused to adopt the report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, under the precedents and practice of the House, and under a decision of the Speaker of this House, found in Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents, section 70, the mover of any proposition before the House is first entitled to be recognized by the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. After the action of the committee has been overruled.

Mr. BURLESON. There is no question about it.

Mr. HAY. If the Chair desires me to read the decision, I will do so.

[Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents, section 70.]

The Member on whose motion a subject is brought before the House is first entitled to the floor.

On January 15, 1849, Mr. Alexander H. Stevens, of Georgia, moved that the rules be suspended for the purpose of enabling him to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the annual message of the President of the United States.

This motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof. The motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole was accordingly made; and the House proceeded to the consideration of the message.

Then Mr. John A. McClernand, of Illinois, rose for the purpose of debate.

Mr. Stephens claimed the floor.

The Speaker stated that Mr. Stephens, by parliamentary courtesy, was entitled to the floor on the message which, on his motion, had been brought before the House.

Mr. McClernand objected to the decision of the Chair, and the Speaker submitted the question to the decision of the House. The House decided that Mr. Stephens was entitled to the floor.

The record of debate shows that the Speaker, after assigning the floor to Mr. Stephens, said that when a question arises as to who is entitled to the floor when various gentlemen claim it, the question, if any gentleman demands it, must be put to the House, not in the nature of an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but whether or not the gentleman is entitled to the floor. The question, therefore, was whether the gentleman from Georgia was entitled to the floor. The Chair further said that the question was not debatable, otherwise the whole time of the House might be taken up in determining who was entitled to the floor.

As the Chair is reading the decision for himself, I will wait.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has one ear toward the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow an interruption?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. What motion pending before the House at this time do you claim you are the author of that gives you the privilege of controlling the report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. HAY. I claim that I am the author of the resolution that is now being considered by the House——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Which the House refused to lay on the table.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to call attention to the fact, however, that while you are the author of the resolution that was introduced, that resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and that committee having unanimously reported the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table, you therefore have no more right than any other Member of this House with respect to controlling the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the rule expressly provides that the recognition then shall go——

Mr. TAWNEY. To the minority.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. To the gentleman who had charge of the measure.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has not charge of the measure, and never had it from the time it was introduced.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is his resolution.

Mr. HAY. I had charge of the motion from the moment that the House voted down the report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. TAWNEY. I grant that if there had been a minority report the contention of the gentleman would be right. The control of the proposition would then have passed to the minority. But in this case there is no minority report. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. LACEY. And there is no minority.

Mr. HAY. Those who opposed the report of the committee are entitled to the recognition of the Chair; and if the gentleman had permitted me——

Mr. TAWNEY. We are as much entitled to recognition as you, because we voted against the proposition.

Mr. HAY. I do not know whether you did or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. All on this side so voted.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair desires to state that the power of recognition is with the Chair, and it is not a debatable matter as to whom the Chair should recognize. There are certain practices touching recognition, well settled—some of them resting in the Digest and others resting in the minds of the older Members—that ordinarily do control and ought to control the action of the Chair touching matters of recognition

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] some weeks ago rose to a question of privilege. The resolution which he presented, contrary to his vote, was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The committee took the resolution, and subsequently reported it to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

On the question coming up in the House, the House refuses to lay the proposition upon the table. Now, the claim that the gentleman has parliamentary control touching his resolution would be, so far as the Chair is informed, without precedent. If we go back to the time when the gentleman did have charge of his resolution, he has by the action of the House lost control of it, because it was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. And the Chair declines to hear discussion touching the Chair's right or power of recognition, because such a practice would lead to interminable debate. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask the Chair whether this principle, which has been decided in many cases in the last two or three Congresses, is not now applicable?—

A motion made by the Member in control of the bill being decided adversely, the right to recognition passes to the opponents.

The right to recognition therefore passes to this side—to those who voted against laying on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] is recognized.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion which I send to the desk in writing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the motion which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McCALL, of Massachusetts, moves to commit the pending report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and all accompanying papers and communications contained in House Report No. 1306, so far as same relates to Members of the House, to a select committee of seven, to be appointed by the Speaker, with instructions to consider said report and said papers and communications, so far as they relate to Members, and the origin of the said papers and communications, and that said select committee be authorized fully to investigate the same, to hear Members and other persons named in said report, and any official of the Post-Office Department in respect to matters affecting Members of the House contained in said report, papers, and communications, and as soon as may be to report to the House the result of said investigation; and that said select committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, examine witnesses on oath, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and to employ such clerical assistance as may be necessary, and have such printing done as the needs of the committee may require.

Mr. McCALL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the Chair ruled out of order the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] upon the ground that it was not privileged, and therefore——

The SPEAKER. Not privileged and not germane—both grounds.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Chair ruled it out on both grounds? Well, then, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order, which I believe has precedence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I have a point of order which may take the gentleman off the floor.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman on his feet, claiming the floor upon the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the statement of the gentleman. He will state his point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My point of order is this: The House has just voted against a proposition to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia on the table; and the first proposition in the present resolution is to lay the resolution on the table, with the accompanying documents. I make the point of order that the House has failed to consider that resolution; and the fact that the gentleman couples in his present resolution matters that were not in the former motion to carry this proposition to the table does not give the House consideration of it at this time. The House has resolved by a vote of the House to consider the Hay resolution, and therefore that proposition is before the House until disposed of. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman might offer an amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Alabama know that proposition offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is to commit the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, with the report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and accompanying papers, to a select committee, and not to lay on the table?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought it was to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the House has refused to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman offer his resolution as an amendment or as a substitute to the Hay resolution?

The SPEAKER. The House has refused to lay on the table the Hay resolution, so that it is now pending before the House, and the gentleman from Massachusetts moves to refer that resolution, with all accompanying papers, to a select committee to be appointed with instructions. The Chair thinks that motion is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood it was to lay on the table.

Mr. McCALL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I owe an apology to the House for presuming to occupy its attention at so late an hour; but in the interest of common fairness I consider it of the utmost importance that we should not adjourn to-night without some one making reply to the bitter denunciation heaped upon General Bristow, and especially to what was said about him and the President by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD].

All day the savage but absolutely baseless attack upon General Bristow has continued. It is time now that the truth be told concerning his attitude toward Congress, and that the facts be permitted to speak in his defense. Mr. Speaker, I assert—and I challenge any gentleman now present to rise and point to anything in the record which contradicts my statement—that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General has never in any report or other communication made a general attack upon the integrity of Representatives in Congress, and that he has never in any report indulged in any reflections upon the character of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. Speaker, General Bristow, in his original report, after a specific statement of facts, used this language concerning the gentleman from Kansas:

I do not offer any criticism against the Congressman. He did what Members of Congress usually do for the public interests of their constituents, and he had the right to expect that the executive officer would do his duty in accordance with the interests of the public service.

That is not unkind. That is generous. Nowhere has there been an assertion to the contrary by General Bristow concerning the gentleman from Kansas, whose denunciation of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and criticism of the President met with so much applause here this afternoon.

This debate has at times degenerated, as I feared it might degenerate, into a covert attack upon the President of the United States. We all heard a gentleman upon the opposite side of the Chamber declare "that the President of the United States has wrongfully indorsed the attacks of General Bristow upon this House."

How totally unwarranted is that statement. At page 145 of his report—the only report he has made on the Post-Office investigation—General Bristow says:

Congressmen, as a rule, want their constituents to have what they are justly entitled to and no more. It is true there are occasional exceptions to this rule, but happily such exceptions are few. But whatever may be the request of the Congressman, the executive officer has a plain duty which the Member of Congress expects him to perform.

In his letter, dated January 25, 1904, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, General Bristow, in speaking of the cases relating to leasing by Congressmen of buildings to the Government for post-offices, says:

In none of the above cases does it appear that the Government has paid an excessive rental. I referred to those cases in my report, not because there was any fraud indicated in the business transactions, but solely because such contracts appeared to be in violation of the statute above mentioned.

Thus it is clear that there was no attack upon the House to be indorsed. And, Mr. Speaker, they are technically in violation of the statute above mentioned. General Bristow would have been derelict in his duty if he had not called attention to these facts. But in truthfully calling attention to these technical violations of the law he made no attack upon the integrity of any Representative.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] declared with much earnestness, amid applause, that in the Bristow report 150 Representatives are charged with illegalities, although, as a matter of fact, nowhere in any Bristow report or in any other report is made any such charge, nor anything remotely resembling it.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have never before seen in the House of Representatives, nor in any other parliamentary body, such a complete setting up of a wrong issue as has occurred in this House within the last two days.

General Bristow has not slandered the House of Representatives, nor can he be justly charged with having in any proper sense of the word attacked any Member of it. He has, as duty required, reported the facts to his superior, and let them speak for themselves. Can any gentleman of the House arise here and prove aught to the contrary?

Mr. JENKINS. But the gentleman refuses to reply to a question——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (continuing). And these assertions which have been made concerning him are precisely——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I will yield five minutes more time to the gentleman from Wisconsin in order to enable him to answer the question.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to ask my colleague from Wisconsin if he did not day before yesterday stand up in this House, in that very seat, and say to the House he was one of the men under indictment in this Bristow report, and tell this House that he was coupled with Machen—who is now on his way to the penitentiary—and in addition to that he said that a guilty man always asked for time; and now he says that Mr. Bristow does not charge him and me with criminality. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do, and I repeat——

Mr. JENKINS. Here is the RECORD right here that shows it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS. You are the same gentleman who made that statement the day before yesterday. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, by that applause just at that time, I am again reminded of the saying of Dumas in one of his romances, that some people are so constituted that they will applaud a mere combination of sounds regardless of sense or truth.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman admits he is romancing I will withdraw my question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. The gentleman does not have to withdraw anything. It will not be at all difficult to answer his question.

Mr. JENKINS. You answer the one I have asked you.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has just said——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to read half a dozen lines from his remarks of yesterday?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have my remarks here, and I prefer to read them myself.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will read them correctly. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So will I. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin, my friend Judge JENKINS, somewhat hungry and a good deal irate, has just arisen and made an alleged quotation from what I said day before yesterday.

Mr. JENKINS. I simply asked a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But you embodied in the question something which I did not say.

Mr. JENKINS. The RECORD shows you did.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will not interrupt without the consent of the Member speaking, and the Chair again cautions the House that it is not proper to refer to Members except in the usual way of the gentleman so-and-so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, permit me to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he is mistaken in saying that I used the words "Bristow report" in my remarks day before yesterday. I have here the RECORD of that day. I did not amend or correct the manuscript, but gave it back to the reporter precisely as it was submitted to me. This is my language verbatim et literatim:

> Mr. Speaker, as one of the Members under indictment [laughter] I desire to say a word on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to postpone the vote on the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia.

The only indictment is that contained in the second report as interpreted by the press.

Now, Mr. Speaker, General Bristow has not been vilified in language more virulent by any of the friends of Machen and Beavers than has been applied to him on this floor, and yet when in calmer moments gentlemen come to examine the record they will not fail to see that the abuse is entirely unwarranted. Here is a man in feeble health, worn out in the people's service, worn out in the cause of pure government.

No man has ever rendered the country more efficient service in the stamping out of official corruption. Six of the culprits have already been convicted and sentenced. And yet, without a line of evidence, this faithful officer is mercilessly denounced in the House of Representatives as if imprisonment and not the public gratitude were his due.

This report submitted by the Committee on Post-Offices is not a Bristow report at all. The Postmaster-General this afternoon sent to me another (a third) letter which the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, says was inadvertently omitted from his report. I proposed this afternoon, if an opportunity were presented, to ask the gentleman from Indiana if another letter, which was not printed, had been sent by him to the Post-Office Department.

Such a letter was sent. And the data submitted to us came in pursuance of the three written requests of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. He asked for everything, and it was sent him.

A few of the reported cases look bad, but a great majority are on their faces entirely innocent.

And yet the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported the good and the bad together, without one word from the committee to distinguish them, and gave them all to the world under the heading "Charges concerning Members of Congress."

As a result of this failure of the Post-Office Committee properly to report on this mass of data we have the newspapers saying:

> Post-office pull is used freely. Congressmen all ask favors from Beavers. Went far beyond the law. Wisconsin Representatives among the offenders.

This would not have been said if the Post-Office Committee had reported specifically on each case, just as the committee which the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to have appointed will be called upon to do.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to his colleague?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, the gentleman needn't yield if he doesn't want to. He can telegraph to the papers that Bristow has whitewashed us. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Massachusetts has introduced a resolution with which I am not entirely pleased. I do not wish to have a committee before which it will be optional for Members of Congress to go. There should be a committee appointed to investigate the case of each Member of the House mentioned in the report, whether he wants to go before the committee or not.

Mr. McCALL. I think the resolution provides for that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has it been changed?

Mr. McCALL. It never contained any such provision as the gentleman refers to. We had no idea of any confessional at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood to the contrary. Mr. Speaker, at a subsequent day I shall rise to a question of personal privilege to answer the charges, or alleged charges, in this report of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, about an hour ago I was prepared to rise in my place and ask unanimous consent that the speeches made to-day and the day before yesterday should be printed upon asbestos paper, in order that there might be no risk of burning up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. One of the things that led me to entertain that desire was the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], in which yesterday he used this language:

> No Member of the House of Representatives whose name is on this list, as my name is, coupled with that of A. W. Machen, whom the country and the world knows to be a convicted felon on his way to the penitentiary, has a right to stand up in the House of Representatives and ask for a moment's delay upon the resolution.

And then there was applause; and I was one of the men who applauded. [Laughter.]

Then the gentleman from Wisconsin went on and charged the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] with "seeking to inject politics into this question." Then he adds:

> The Republican party has never in its platform, neither has the Democratic party in its platform, suggested that graft in the post-office was legitimate.

None of them has suggested it in its platforms; but there seems to be a queer sort of inclination, outside of platforms, not to inquire too closely into the graft on the part of men who are the Post-Office Department.

I did not rise to make a speech, Mr. Speaker, I rose chiefly to tell a story. The position of the gentleman from Wisconsin yesterday and his position to-day and what he has said to-day, to the effect that "Mr. Bristow has not charged any wrong upon any Member of Congress," taken together with his defense of him—these things taken together with this report to which the gentleman referred yesterday as "coupling his name and that of others with that of A. W. Machen, a convicted felon"——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; for a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman know that General Bristow has been ill for six weeks; that during that time he has not been in his office more than two or three hours, and that he had nothing to do with the report (except two pages) brought in by the committee, and did not see it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not know anything about that. I am afraid the gentleman is going to spoil my story. I may not have time to tell it.

Several MEMBERS. Go on with your story.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not know anything about what the gentleman says; but I do know that this evening he "coos as gently as a sucking dove" and that yesterday he was as rampageous as a roaring lion. [Laughter.]

I have about come to the conclusion that the gentleman is very much in the fix of my old friend Uncle Marlin Stubblefield. One day Uncle Marlin spoke of a certain family of people up in the northern part of my county as being fellows with tusks, that rooted in the ground, and ate acorns, and wore no clothes, and "warn't no folks." Soon after that a great big strapping son of the head of that family, with two six-shooters, came in and said to Uncle Marlin: "I understand, sir, you have said my father was a hog." The old man measured up the six-shooters, measured up the size of the fellow who accosted him, just as my friend has measured up the size of the White House this evening. [Laughter.] Uncle Marlin, as I said, looked at the fellow's size, and then he said: "Whoever told you that is a liar. All I said was this: 'That your father had tusks, that he rooted in the ground, that he didn't wear no clothes, and that he warn't no folks.' Now, you can make the most of that, if you choose, but I'll swear I never said he was a hog."

Mr. Bristow has not said that any of you were hogs; he has not said any of you were corrupt. He has said that you have induced corruption in the Post-Office Department, and back of that he means, if he means anything, that you knew you were inducing it when you did it, and that you "exerted undue influence." He has given all the descriptions of a hog, by which descriptions every man would know a hog if he saw him, or if he had ever seen one before, but he declines to say in hæc verba that you are hogs. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to renew my reminiscences in connection with my own county and recall the memory of my old friend Marlin Stubblefield. I meant nothing serious at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the previous question.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COWHERD. Will any opportunity be offered to amend the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The SPEAKER. It depends on whether the House orders the previous question. The ordering of the previous question would cut off amendments and bring the House to a vote on the main question.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McCALL. I should be glad to yield to the gentleman, but so many around me must get away that I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. COWHERD. This will take no time, I assure the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, Mr. COWHERD and others demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 141, noes 119.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Pending the division,

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi said: Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays upon this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Clerk began the calling of the roll.

Pending the roll call,

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi said: Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request for the yeas and nays temporarily, and will ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to do that, unless by unanimous consent, because the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk has already commenced to call.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I will explain——

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 2, answered "present" 6, not voting 118, as follows:

YEAS—257.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Norfolk, Va., March 9, 1904.

To the Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President of the Senate of the United States.

DEAR SIR: To the end that the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Jamestown should be signalized adequately, the Jamestown Exposition Company was organized and chartered. The general assembly of the State of Virginia, understanding the preponderant influence which the first permanent settlement of the English-speaking people in America has had upon our nation's history and upon the spread of republican institutions throughout the world, considered that this opportunity to inculcate patriotism and exhibit progress should not be allowed to pass.

The gentlemen to whom has been intrusted the conduct of the memorial deem it proper that our nation's lawmakers should visit the spot most sacred in our country's history.

They therefore have the honor of requesting your presence and that of the Senators of the United States on a pilgrimage to be made to Jamestown Island on the 18th day of this month, March, 1904.

C. BROOK JOHNSTON,

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I introduce a bill and ask the courtesy of the Senate that it may be printed in the RECORD. My purpose is to get it more particularly before my colleagues upon the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, many of whom will not be here until next Monday, and next Monday we shall have to take some very important action upon the subject.

The bill (S. 4982) to provide for the government of the canal zone at Panama, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks that the bill may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the territory acquired by the United States from the Republic of Panama, under the treaty dated and signed on the 18th day of November, 1903, at Washington, and the other territorial rights connected therewith under said treaty, shall constitute a Government reservation of the United States for canal purposes, which shall be styled and known as the "Panama Canal zone," and shall be subject to civil and military law under the control of the President, as herein provided, or when Congress shall so direct.

Until Congress shall otherwise direct, the full military and civil power to govern and protect said zone is hereby conferred upon the President of the United States, to be exercised through the Isthmian Canal Commission and such other officers or persons as the President may appoint, select, or detail for such duty, as herein provided, or as is provided in the act of June 28, 1902, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a ship canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans."

SEC. 2. That the laws relating to the civil rights of persons and to crimes and to persons charged with crimes, except such as relate to religious or political privileges, or to political offenses, that were in force in the Republic of Panama on the 26th day of February, 1904, shall remain in force until the same are repealed, amended, or superseded by laws enacted in pursuance of this act, or by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the laws of the United States respecting citizenship, immigration, naturalization, and the importation of contract laborers shall not apply to said canal-zone reservation until Congress shall hereafter otherwise direct.

SEC. 4. Until Congress shall otherwise direct, the Isthmian Canal Commission shall constitute a legislative body for the canal-zone reservation, of which body not less than five commissioners, present, shall constitute a quorum to do business. They may adopt rules for their own government, appoint clerks to keep and preserve the records, and may create such other necessary offices, and with such pay or salaries as shall be authorized by laws duly enacted and approved by the President, as hereinafter provided, and may appoint persons to discharge such duties.

Said legislative body shall hold its first session in the city of Washington on the call of the President of the United States, by his proclamation fixing the date and place of such session.

All subsequent sessions shall be held in the canal-zone reservation unless the President of the United States shall otherwise direct, by proclamation, as to any special session to be held in the city of Washington. The regular sessions of said commissioners as a legislative body shall be held on the first Monday of each month. A complete record of all laws, regulations, orders, and proceedings of the Isthmian Canal Commission shall be made up and signed by its chairman at the close of each month.

SEC. 5. The legislative power of said Isthmian Canal Commission shall not include laws or regulations that affect the treaty relations between the United States and the Government of the Republic of Panama, or any regulation of commerce or trade with other countries, such matters being reserved for the exclusive action and control of the Government of the United States. It shall extend to all local matters of civil and criminal cognizance, arising within said canal zone, except laws or regulations relating to estates of deceased persons and laws of inheritance and descents, or laws relating to wills or devises, or the administration of the estates of decedents, and the laws of escheat; all of which are reserved for the action of Congress.

The legislative power of said Isthmian Canal Commission shall also extend to the enforcement of any lawful rule or regulation issued by competent authority for the government or control of any officer or person employed in the business of the United States within said canal zone, and for the protection of such persons in the performance of their duties. No act or resolution of said Isthmian Canal Commission, having the effect of law, shall be operative until the same has been submitted to the President of the United States and approved by him.

SEC. 6. The President shall have power at any time, on the request of three or more members of the Isthmian Canal Commission setting forth the grounds of such request, to declare that the isthmian canal zone reservation is in a state of insurrection or commotion that is dangerous to the property or interests of the United States or to persons or property within said zone, and the civil laws applicable to said zone shall thereupon be suspended, and the President is empowered to use the local police force or any part of the military or naval power of the United States to preserve or to restore peace and order in or near said zone and to enforce obedience to the laws, under the powers conferred upon him, in such cases by the laws of the United States when insurrection or rebellion exists in any of the States or Territories of the United States.

SEC. 7. A surgeon in chief for the isthmian canal zone and for the cities of Panama and Colon and the adjacent harbors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. He shall have control and supervision of all works of sanitation in said canal zone and in said cities of Colon and Panama in virtue of the power and authority conferred or that may be conferred upon the United States by treaty with the Republic of Panama or otherwise; and his regulations, orders, and requirements in respect of all such matters, when approved by the President of the United States, shall be enforced by the Isthmian Canal Commission, by legislation or otherwise, as may be necessary for their effectual execution.

Said surgeon in chief and the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and the Surgeon-General of the Navy shall constitute a board of health for the isthmian canal zone, whose duty it shall be to make a preliminary examination, in person, of said canal zone and the adjacent country and of the cities of Colon and Panama and their environs, to ascertain the scope and general requirements of a plan of sanitation for said areas, which shall be reported to the President for his adoption, with or without amendment.

Said isthmian board of health shall also, and subject to the like approval of the President, determine and define the extent of the jurisdiction that is given, under the laws of Congress now in force, to the Bureau of Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service on the mainland between the waters of the bays of Colon and Panama, and on the islands in said bays, in the establishment of quarantine stations; or in respect of any other matter that will cause efficient cooperation and mutual support between the health and hospital service on the mainland, the islands, and the adjacent waters in charge of the surgeon in chief of the canal zone and the public health and quarantine service of the United States, including the prevention of the importation and exportation of all malignant diseases.

SEC. 8. Said isthmian board of health shall also formulate general laws and regulations relating to health in the canal zone, subject to the like approval of the President, which may be added to, altered, amended, or repealed from time to time, prescribing the number and qualifications of surgeons, assistant surgeons, and other persons to be employed in the hospital or other service in charge of the surgeon in chief of the canal zone, and the method of appointment of such of them as are not required by law to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fixing the salaries or pay and allowances of such persons.

The Isthmian Canal Commission shall not exercise the power of appointment or removal of any officer or other person employed in the health service of the isthmian canal zone, either national or local, but may recommend persons to the President for appointment to or removal from places or employment in such service.

SEC. 9. All works of engineering, location, and construction, in pursuance of the general plan adopted for the sanitation of the canal zone or any place adjacent thereto, and in the erection, repair, or improvement of hospitals or camps, shall be conducted under the orders and direction of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and the cost of the same shall be charged to the account for the construction of the canal.

All engineering and other work done in the construction of quarantine stations and the appurtenances thereof on the mainland or on any island within the canal zone or on the adjacent waters shall be done under the direction of the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and the expenditures for the same shall be carried on his accounts with the Treasury Department and shall be paid through said Department from money appropriated for such purposes.

All supplies of every character for the hospital and health service in charge of the surgeon in chief of the canal zone shall be furnished by order of the Isthmian Canal Commission, upon the requisition of such surgeon in chief; and all expenditures on account of salaries, allowances, and necessary expenses of said hospital and health service shall be carried upon the accounts of said Commission for canal construction.

SEC. 10. The Isthmian Canal Commission shall receive all money to be expended by its order, through requisitions of its chairman upon the Secretary of War, and shall account through the War Department for all money so received and expended. The manner and times of accounting for money so received and expended shall be fixed by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War.

All disbursements of money appropriated by Congress for the construction of the isthmian canal shall be made by order or regulation of the Isthmian Canal Commission, through paymasters of the Army of the United States, who shall account to the War Department for all money received and disbursed by them.

No expenditures for military or naval forces employed within the canal zone or in its protection shall be charged against any money appropriated for the construction of the canal, but expenses shall be borne by the departments, respectively, that provided such forces or furnish such protection.

SEC. 11. The sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Government of the Republic of Panama, in compliance with the stipulations of the treaty with said Republic dated November 18, 1903. And the President shall cause said money to be paid to said Government without delay. And thereupon he is directed and required to take possession of and to occupy the canal zone described and defined in said treaty as the property of the United States, and he shall cause the flag of the United States to be raised over said zone and shall require the Isthmian Canal Commission to proceed forthwith to perform their duties in said zone and in places appurtenant thereto according to law.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 12, 1904.

ABRAM CLAYPOOL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 9791) granting a pension to Abram Claypool.

W STREET NE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate for consideration bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask permission to call up the bills perhaps somewhat out of order.

I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4033) to authorize the abandonment of W street NE., Washington, D. C.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to abandon W street NE., between Lincoln avenue and Rhode Island avenue, as indicated on the second section of the highway extension plans; and any future subdivision shall omit the part of W street lying between those limits.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATING TO MARRIAGE.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I should like to ask for the consideration of——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such a request is not in order. Unanimous consent was given for the consideration of District of Columbia bills up to 2 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask now for the consideration of the bill (S. 4130) to amend sections 1288, 1293, and 1294 of the Code of the District of Columbia, relating to marriages, so as to authorize marriages according to the custom of the Society of Friends or Quakers.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTS WITH THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 4419) in relation to contracts with the District of Columbia.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. As this matter relates to contracts and some questions might be raised, I ask that the letter of the Commissioners may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER February 26, 1904, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4419) in relation to contracts with the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and introduced at their request. Their reasons for recommending its enactment into law are set forth in the following letter:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 17, 1904.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith, with request for favorable action thereon, a draft of "A bill in relation to contracts with the District of Columbia."

Section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, provides that contracts must be made for all work involving the construction, improvement, alteration, or repairs of the streets, avenues, highways, alleys, gutters, sewers, and all work of like nature involving an expenditure of more than $100. In a recent informal interview with the Comptroller of the Treasury the Commissioners were advised that a literal compliance with this provision of law was obligatory upon them, even though it required additional clerical force to prepare and record the almost innumerable contracts for comparatively small amounts, and even though the cost of doing such work was increased by the cost of the bond which is required to be filed with each contract. Experience has shown that the District can, with absolute safety, enter into agreements with contractors to do work up to the sum of $500 without requiring a formal contract and bond, and for this reason favorable action upon the proposed change in law is requested.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman of Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF ALBEMARLE STREET.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill (S. 3869) for the extension of Albemarle street be next considered.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "directed," to insert "within twenty days after the passage of this act;" so as to make the section read:

That inasmuch as over 99 per cent of the ground required for the extension of Albemarle street, in the District of Columbia, from Connecticut avenue to Rock Creek Park, has been dedicated to the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed, within twenty days after the passage of this act, to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by petition, particularly describing the lands to be taken, a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to complete the extension of Albemarle street to a width of 90 feet between Connecticut avenue and Broad Branch road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 4, after the word "condemned," to strike out "to connect said streets;" in line 8, after the word "as," to strike out "herein provided" and insert "extended;" in line 10, after the word "benefited," to insert "by the extension of said street;" and in line 12, after the word "benefited," to strike out the following:

Provided, That the remaining portion of any parcel of land of any party or parties dedicating or who may have heretofore dedicated a portion thereof for the extension of said Albemarle street shall be exempt from any assessment in respect to the cost of condemning any portion of said street that may not be dedicated, and from any assessment or tax for benefits to such remaining land, or any portion thereof, for the extension of said street.

And to insert:

; and in determining the amounts to be assessed against said pieces or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations of such pieces or parcels of land and the benefits they may severally receive from the extension of said street as aforesaid, and also the fact that dedications have been made from said pieces or parcels for the extension of said street.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned, as herein provided, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury hereinafter provided as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits against those pieces or parcels of land on each side of Albemarle street as extended, and also on any or all pieces or parcels of land which will be benefited by the extension of said street, in the proportion that said jury may find said pieces or parcels of land will be benefited; and in determining the amounts to be assessed against said pieces or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations of such pieces or parcels of land and the benefits they may severally receive from the extension of said street as aforesaid, and also the fact that dedications have been made from said pieces or parcels for the extension of said street.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 4, after the word "provided," to insert "and to assess benefits;" and in line 6, after the word "seven," to strike out "eight;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the proceedings to condemn the land necessary to connect said street as herein provided and to assess benefits shall be taken under the provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 11 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the extension of Columbia road east of Thirteenth street, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, so far as the same may be applicable to the provisions of this act: Provided, That the amount of money found to be due and awarded as damages as hereinbefore provided shall be payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and a sufficient sum to pay the amount of said awards is hereby appropriated, payable as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after section 3, the following as an additional section:

SEC. 4. That when confirmed by the court the several assessments herein provided to be made shall severally be a lien upon the land assessed, and shall be collected as special improvement taxes in the District of Columbia, and shall be payable as provided in section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902. That said court may allow amendments in form or substance in any petition, process, record, or proceeding, or in the description of the property proposed to be taken, or of property assessed for the benefits whenever such amendments will not interfere with the substantial rights of the parties interested, and any such amendment may be made after as well as before the order or judgment confirming the verdict or award aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESIGNATION OF PARCELS OF LAND.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3456) to distinctly designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BACON. I wish to know if I correctly understood the clerk in reading the bill to state the "county of Washington" several times? Do those words occur?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that they do occur.

Mr. BACON. It may be that legislation has escaped me, but is there such a county of Washington? There is none in the District of Columbia unless there has been some legislation that I am not informed of. The word "county" occurs two or three times.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it say "county of Washington?"

Mr. BACON. That is the way the Clerk read it each time.

Mr. GALLINGER. It speaks of county taxation.

Mr. BACON. The Secretary read "county of Washington" several times.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does occur—"blocks, lots, and parcels of land in the said county of Washington."

Mr. BACON. It occurs more than once. It occurs at least three times.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is mistaken as to that, but it does occur once, certainly.

Mr. BACON. I can not be mistaken, because the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] who sits next to me confirms my statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator that the report of the committee embraces a letter from the Commissioners, in which the Commissioners say:

The county of Washington was, prior to 1872, under control of the old levy court. In that year the court was succeeded by the board of public works, but failed to deliver to its successor any of its records or plats. As a consequence, when the present form of government was installed it was wholly unprovided with plats of county property.

So it seems there is such a thing in this District as a county of Washington.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean that the use of that phraseology in the second section is intentional?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should say so.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to state that the land outside of the corporations of Georgetown and Washington—outside the boundary—was originally the county of Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. But all its county functions have been abolished, and the name simply remains.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

Mr. HOAR. Is that a legal name?

Mr. STEWART. It was the legal name. It is referred to sometimes by the original legal name, and so it is used in this report. It is referred to for boundaries; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. BACON. I will call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact, pointed out to me by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], that the phrase occurs three times, twice in the first section and once in the second section. Possibly it occurs in other places; I am not sure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is right about that. This bill was drafted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or by the law officer of the District, and there is to-day such a thing as the county of Washington—the land outside of the city limits.

I will say to the Senator that I think it is an unfortunate designation, but nevertheless it exists.

Mr. BACON. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. In ordinary legislation, when we say a county we are speaking of a political entity.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. And there is no such political entity in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. BACON. If it be true, as I understand from the Senator, that what is now the District of Columbia formerly constituted part of a county of Maryland known as "Washington," then those are now simply words of description and ought not to be designated as a county inside the District, because there is no such thing. If the word "formerly" is used before the words "the county," simply to preserve the identity of certain blocks and subdivisions of that former county, it would be all right, but I respectfully submit that it is not in accordance with correct designation to speak of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, because there is no such political entity.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the Senator's permission, I will have the bill passed over for the present.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONNECTING ROADS TO ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 2710) for the opening of connecting highways on the east and west sides of the Zoological Park, District of Columbia.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUTUAL INVESTMENT FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2871) to incorporate the Mutual Investment Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] who reported this bill the reason why, as to this Mutual Investment Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, this provision was made?

SEC. 3. That the assets of said company shall consist of the premium notes given by the insured, the cash paid as interest thereon, and all property and profit derived from the investment or use of its income or assets; but the reserve fund of said company shall not, at any one time, exceed $2.0,000, exclusive of the real estate it may hold as hereinafter authorized.

Would not that be rather a small amount for a reserve fund in the event that a great fire like that in Baltimore, should occur in Washington, or wherever the business of this company may be transacted? The members of a mutual fire insurance company are likely to be persons by whom an assessment is liable to be pretty severely felt. It seems to me that instead of limiting the amount of the reserve fund of this company to $200,000, which might not be enough to cover one-half of its losses under certain conditions, it would be better policy to provide that the reserve fund shall not exceed a certain percentage of the liabilities. I suppose the object of that limitation is to prevent the accumulation of too large a reserve fund, and that it is like other limitations upon corporations owning a vast amount of property.

I suggest to the Senator that perhaps the bill had better go over so that it may be further considered.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. This bill came from the other House; its provisions have been submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and have met their approval.

Mr. HOAR. Probably the Commissioners did not consider that point.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Probably not.

Mr. HOAR. I have had, as I suppose every lawyer has had, a very large opportunity for considerable observation about these limitations on insurance and other business corporations, and I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he let the bill go over until Monday morning, and in the meantime that he prepare an amendment to the effect that the reserve fund and property of this insurance company shall not exceed a certain percentage—not making it an unreasonable percentage—of the amount of its liabilities. Such a reserve should be proportioned to the extent of its business in the District, which may amount to four or five million dollars. If there should occur a fire here like that which occurred in Baltimore, this little reserve fund of $200,000 would be very inadequate, and certainly a mutual insurance company ought not to be created with the expectation that its liabilities are to be met by assessments on its stockholders, for that is a long and intricate process.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is a good one, and I am therefore perfectly willing that the bill shall go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside for the present.

TEMPORARY COMMITMENT OF INSANE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I now ask for the consideration of House bill 8692.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8692) to authorize the apprehension and detention of insane persons in the District of Columbia, and providing for their temporary commitment in the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move an amendment to this bill, and I ask the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who reported it, if he will accept the amendment. In section 1, page 2, line 10, after the words "notify husband or wife," I suggest that the words "and children if of lawful age" be inserted, and then where it reads "or some near relative or friend," to strike out the word "or" and insert the words "and also;" so that it will read "and also some near relative or friend."

The object of the amendment is to prevent fraudulent or colorable commitments of persons, especially of married women who have property and single women who have property, whose relatives wish to get control of it. It seems to me it would be well to provide for notice to some persons outside, because the persons originally notified might be the very persons who are in such a conspiracy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it not read better, I will ask the Senator, if the language were as follows:

Notify the husband, wife, children, if of lawful age, or some near relative.

Mr. HOAR. I want to have it appear that they shall all be notified, not merely one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I think if a person of full age is to be committed to an asylum there ought to be some notice beyond that to the husband or wife or children, because there might be a conspiracy on their part.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will read this section carefully, he will see that it relates exclusively to the arrest of persons who are found or believed to be insane, and it provides for their temporary commitment. I should be very glad to adopt any amendment which will fully protect them in all of their interests, but it occurs to me that the amendment the Senator suggests is so broad that it might require a considerable length of time to reach all of these parties and have notice served upon them, and it might not be necessary to do so.

Mr. HOAR. Under this bill, as it now reads in regard to these commitments, a man with a wife and children or a woman with a husband and children might be committed, and the notice might be sent by the officer to some friend, so that there would be no notice sent to the family at all. The Senator certainly will change that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly, I shall be very glad to accept any amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, this colloquy may be very interesting, but we can not hear a single word over here.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest that the provision should be so worded that notification will be sent to "the husband or wife and children, if of lawful age, and also some near relative or friend" if the address be known. It seems to me that is not going too far. There will be only one person out of the family to be notified.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 10, after the word "wife," it is proposed to strike out the word "or" and insert "and children, if of lawful age, and also;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That it shall be the duty of the major and superintendent of the said Metropolitan police to forthwith notify the husband or wife and children, if of lawful age, and also some near relative or friend of the person so apprehended and detained whose address may be known to the said major and superintendent or whose address can by reasonable inquiry be ascertained by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK ON GEORGETOWN HEIGHTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) to provide a public park on Georgetown Heights, in the District of Columbia.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the acquirement by purchase or condemnation of the tract of land known as "Montrose," lying immediately north of Road or U street and east of Lovers lane, on Georgetown Heights, containing 16 acres, more or less, at an expense not exceeding $150,000, and for that purpose appropriates $150,000, payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and that the tract of land when acquired shall be forever held and used as a park for the recreation and pleasure of the people.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the first section of the bill again read.

The Secretary again read section 1.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMISSION OF FINES AND GRANTING OF PARDONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 2299) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remit fines and grant pardons, which has been heretofore read and partially considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to grant pardons for all offenses which are cognizable in the police court of the District of Columbia and are in violation of any act of Congress now in effect or hereafter to be enacted relating to municipal matters, or of any police regulation, building regulation, or other regulation now in effect or hereafter to be adopted by the said Commissioners by authority of law for the violation of which a penalty or forfeiture is provided, or of any law or ordinance of the late corporation of Washington, any law or ordinance of Georgetown and of the levy court, and any law enacted by the legislative assembly which still remains in effect; and that the power of pardon hereby granted shall include all the lesser degrees of the pardoning power.

SEC. 2. That the said Commissioners shall have the power to grant remissions of forfeitures of recognizances acknowledged and taken, or to be acknowledged and taken, before any court, judge, justice of the peace, or other magistrate within the District of Columbia in the course of any criminal prosecution for violation of any of the laws and regulations mentioned in the first section of this act or for surety of the peace.

SEC. 3. That the said Commissioners shall file and keep all applications for clemency and all other papers relating thereto in cases of which they shall take cognizance, shall keep a docket showing the course of action upon each application for clemency, and shall make an annual report to Congress at the commencement of each regular session of all cases in which they have exercised clemency during the last preceding fiscal year, said statement to show in each case the name of the recipient of clemency, the sentence and its date, the extent of the act of clemency, the date of such action, and the reason therefor.

SEC. 4. That the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make and promulgate rules governing the manner and form of applications for clemency and the conditions under which such applications will be considered.

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after thirty days from the date of its approval.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] who, I understand, has reported this bill, and who, of course, has investigated this question, whether Congress can confer upon the District Commissioners the power to pardon?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think there is any doubt about it. They have done it for a long time.

Mr. SPOONER. In this District?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; they have the power now. Has the Senator the report on this bill?

Mr. SPOONER. No; I have not the report. Perhaps it is here, though.

Mr. MALLORY. I communicated with the Attorney-General on the subject of the bill, and his response to my communication is pretty full. It was at his suggestion that I substituted the bill which is now before the Senate for the one originally introduced, drawn at the suggestion of the Commissioners.

Mr. SPOONER. I can understand there might be a distinction as to the power to remit forfeitures of recognizances, but I have not investigated the question, and the Senator has.

Mr. MALLORY. I had some doubt about it, and I thought I would submit it to the Attorney-General and have him investigate it. He says in his report:

I thoroughly agree with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that the enactment of such a law is advisable for the reasons stated by them in the passage of their letter which you have quoted.

I find upon examination that the bill in its present form is even more limited in its scope than the present law—that is, the act of April 28, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 22). This limitation is twofold: First, the pardoning power is limited to offenses which are in violation of acts of Congress relating to municipal matters; whereas there are still in effect in the District of Columbia many of the laws and ordinances of the late corporations of Washington and of Georgetown, besides many regulations adopted by the Commissioners for the violation of which a penalty or forfeiture is provided.

I will not undertake to read the whole communication, but in effect the Commissioners of the District of Columbia ever since 1892 have exercised the pardoning power. This bill, I will state, meets with the approval of the Attorney-General, and was drawn, in fact, in the office of the Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to exercise the pardoning power, and to remit forfeitures of recognizances."

SQUARE 1131 IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask that the bill (H. R. 819) to quitclaim all interest of the United States of America in and to all of square 1131 in the city of Washington, D. C., to Sidney Bieber, be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the last bill I wish to call up today, so I yield the floor.

SALE OF INDECENT PHOTOGRAPHS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a few minutes. I desire to present a matter to the Senate, and through the Senate to the country. I am averse to taking notice in the Senate of any newspaper misrepresentations, but I think the circumstances of this squib are such as to justify me in doing so. I find in yesterday's Evening Star, of this city, this squib:

Indianola is arresting people for selling photographs of President Roosevelt and Booker Washington. The city is loath to relinquish its suddenly acquired fame.

That would amount to very little disconnected from the Indianola post-office incident, but, connected with that, I think it has a significance which ought to be noticed, and especially as it is utterly unfounded.

I wish to read a letter to the Memphis Commercial-Appeal from Mr. A. G. Paxton, of Leland, Miss., whom I know well and have known for a long time. He is a lawyer of high standing, a gentleman of veracity, and I have no hesitancy in asserting my belief in his veracity. I regard him as a gentleman, as loyal to the truth as Edward Bruce, as fearless as Roderick Dhu or the Knight of Snowdoun, and as patriotic as William Wallace; and I am therefore satisfied that every word he has uttered in this article is absolutely true. I will not read his comments upon the facts, but I will merely read the statement of facts out of which I suppose this squib in yesterday's Evening Star grew. This is a letter directed by Mr. Paxton to the Commercial-Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn., and it is a letter to which he has appended his name, and his name is published:

On Friday evening, arriving at Leland, on my way to my plantation, I found an excited gathering of some of the most prominent planters and citizens of this county, and was requested to remain over there to assist in looking after a matter of the highest public importance, involving the present and future peace not only of this neighborhood, but of this whole southern country. The town marshal and a justice of the peace were enlisted, and going around to the livery stable four men, white men, were arrested. All were taken red-handed. In their baggage we found many beautiful pictures—photographs of landscapes and other views. These pictures, gotten up by the Whiteside View Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, they had been showing and selling to white people. In addition to this we found other photographs of the most infamous and indecent character, some of white women in night robes, with portions of their persons exposed, and others of white women utterly naked, with not a rag or a leaf to hide their exposed naked persons. One in particular presented several white women naked as they came into the world, each in the arms of a naked negro. Pictures of this character, it was proved and admitted by the men, were widely sold to negroes. None of this character had been seen or shown by them to white people. One of the last named was taken from a negro by my brother, A. J. Paxton, at Wilmot, Miss.

All of these pictures purport to have been gotten up and issued by the Whiteside View Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, whose name is printed thereon. With each set of pictures sold there was also sold a little view glass in a frame, which I believe is called a stereoscope. It gives the perspective. Placing the picture in the frame and looking through it shows like an open view—like nature. It is proper to say that the last-named picture was a representation of Bouquereau's picture, "The birth of Venus." In the original the man no doubt was white, but in the pictures being circulated the man had been colored black. Manifestly it was blacked for a purpose.

The men said that some of them had been in this business for as much as nine years. One of them claimed that he had only been working two days and had not delivered any pictures, and, claiming to have a wife and baby at the hotel, much against the wishes of some, on the woman's account he was permitted to escape by the first train north. All of them claimed that they were regularly employed by the Whiteside View Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and they stated that "this concern had not less than 100 agents" scattered over the country scattering this infamous seed of race hatred, desire for social equality, miscegenation, and lust of rape.

The three men—B. D. Shienes, L. D. Truitt, and J. H. Washburn—were tried in an orderly manner yesterday before F. H. Ivey, justice of the peace at Leland, and, pleading guilty, they were each fined $40 and given in addition twenty days on the county farm, the utmost penalty provided by the law.

The conduct of the people in thus permitting the law, utterly inefficient in its penalties, to take its course is, to say the least, a tribute to their patience and to their qualities as law-abiding and law-loving citizens, and the melting hearts which, upon a poor woman's account, permitted a vile firebrand to escape testifies to the chivalry of southern men and their reverence for women.

But, Mr. Editor, I doubt very much if the patience even of these men would have stood the strain had they known the whole truth. The accused claimed that the coloring of the man in "The birth of Venus" was mere shading and was not intended to represent a negro nor to teach equality, though it was very black. It being inconceivable almost that any heart could be so malevolent and deadly in its hatred and that any brain could be so devilish as to design such infamy, the crowd seemed hardly able to credit their own senses, and as there were so many indecent pictures scattered throughout the country, notably on calendars, in saloons, and other places, they were disposed in part to deny the evidences of their own eyes and to be lenient.

After sentence had been pronounced and the crowd dispersed, it was developed that, through the mail, there had been sent to one of the convicted men, B. D. Shieves, from the Royal Picture Gallery Company, of 152 Lake street, Chicago, a sample of an article for sale. Mr. Campbell, of Greenville, who prosecuted the men, and I personally looked at this sample article. It consisted of a magnificent engraving showing President Theodore Roosevelt and Booker Washington seated at dinner in the White House. Upon a streamer on the front side of the table was printed in blazing letters the word "Equality." Accompanying this picture was a circular showing where these engravings, together with beautiful gilt frames, could be had, to wit, from the firm above-named.

This picture, with its plain, printed teaching, in the possession of one of these men, shows conclusively what was meant by the blackened man in the "Birth of Venus." As said before, the circulation of these first-named pictures has been going on by the Whiteside View Company, according to the statement of one of the men, with its hundreds of active canvassers, for many years. I presume that since the date of the famous dinner at the White House, or thereabouts, the Washington and Roosevelt picture has had active distribution also.

This states the facts, Mr. President. Indianola is about 20 miles, directly on the railroad, except it is about a mile from Leland down to Elizabeth——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow a page to bring me the paper from which he has just been reading?

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes, sir. Indianola is about 20 miles east of Leland. These men have been selling beautiful pictures to the white people. They had exhibited to the white people there none other. They had these indecent pictures and the pictures of Mr. Roosevelt dining with Booker Washington, but they were neither selling nor exhibiting them to white people. It was stated by one of the men, who pleaded guilty to the charge preferred against him, that they had agents all over the country, and that they had been circulating and selling these pictures for nine years.

At the town of Indianola, when other agents were found selling pictures and not exhibiting to the authorities there, nor to the white people where they could be seen—the obscene pictures—they were arrested on what had been confessed, as stated, and an investigation made to see whether they, too, were selling obscene pictures. They were arrested for selling obscene pictures and not for selling the pictures of Mr. Roosevelt and Booker Washington.

Out of that incident this little clipping is taken, and it is charged that they are arresting people for selling pictures of the President and Booker Washington. That is not true; but that, in connection with the other evidence, was a circumstance to make the people of that community, and especially the officers, believe that they also were selling obscene pictures, which is a violation of the law of the State of Mississippi under our statute; and for such offense the arrest was made, and not for selling the pictures of the President dining with Booker Washington.

Now, those people who in this way post up teachings of social equality really by their action admit that they do not believe in the equality of the races, but that they believe the negro is of a depraved, inferior race, for they showed to the white people and sold to the white people only pictures of virtuous scope and effect, while they presented for sale and sold to the negroes base, lewd, obscene pictures with lecherous design.

Now, this has been going on, according to the confession of one of these parties, for nine years. When they present these pictures to negro men and sell them in violation of the laws of the State, the negroes are lured on thereby to commit a nameless crime against the white women of the State, and these negroes are therefor, in the rage of the people of the community, taken out and executed by vengeance and not by law, which in its turn is made a cause for a cry against an alleged lawlessness of the State of Mississippi.

These photographs do not purport to be pictures of women in the State of Mississippi, but they purport to be photographs taken in Cincinnati.

Now, here is the section of the law under which these people were taken up and tried, and the only wonder to me is that they were permitted to be tried at all, under the circumstances, in any portion of this country, North or South, East or West, on the Atlantic or on the Pacific. Section 1216 of the Annotated Code of Mississippi, 1892, reads:

1216. Obscenity, indecent prints, etc. (Laws 1884, p. 81). A person who sells, lends, gives away, or offers to give away, or shows, or has in his possession with intent to sell or give away, or to show, or advertises, or otherwise offers for loan, gift, sale, or distribution, an obscene or indecent book, writing, paper, picture, drawing, or photograph, or any article or instrument of indecent or immoral use, or who designs, copies, draws, photographs, or otherwise prepares such a book, picture, drawing, or other article, or writes or prints, or causes to be written or printed, a circular, advertisement, or notice of any kind, or gives information orally, stating when, where, how, of whom, or by what means such an indecent or obscene article or thing can be purchased or obtained, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined not more than $20 or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding twenty days, or both.

I suppose the lawmakers never conceived that it was possible for any man or set of men to print or publish such pictures as these, or that it was possible for any men to go about and sell them, secretly or otherwise, else there would have been a severer penalty attached to this offense. I do not believe that any penalty is too severe, that the death penalty is not too severe, to apply to men who would thus encourage the commission of a crime which itself encourages lynching, not only in Mississippi, but in any section of this country.

Now, I say it can be seen that the people of Indianola did not arrest anybody for having in his possession or for selling pictures of Mr. President Roosevelt and Booker Washington, but in view of the fact that the men who were selling these pictures of the President and Booker Washington throughout the State had confessed that they were also engaged in the selling of the indecent, lewd, and obscene literature, it was reasonable to suppose that they were engaged in that infamy in Indianola. The authorities arrested them and then began to search for evidence to convict them.

It may be that ordinarily there ought to be evidence that would convict before a man is arrested, but after the men should have escaped from the community it would have been useless to procure the testimony or discover the testimony by investigation. Grand juries frequently indict where it is expected that on the trial in the court before a petit jury other evidence will be obtained to supplement that before the grand jury.

I beg pardon of the Senate for taking up its time. I think the Senate will see the justice of my doing so, however, to put the truth on its tardy way after the publication of this article, whether intentionally to deceive or not, by the paper from which I have read this clipping.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, except only that the Senator from Mississippi seemed to think that it was worthy of attention, I should not have regarded what he has brought before the Senate as worthy of the slightest notice, and I would not, if I had seen it, as he has seen it, thought of saying anything about it to the Senate. But inasmuch as he has brought it before this body and made the comments that he has, I simply rise to say that I have never heard of the Whiteside View Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, which seems to figure so prominently in this newspaper article. I am pretty familiarly acquainted, too, with the business men of that community, for I have lived there pretty nearly all of my life.

I hope the Senator from Mississippi and others will not take the Whiteside View Company, if there is any such company there, as a representative enterprise of that community. That is all I have to say. I now return the paper to the Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN. I never supposed that the Whiteside View Company, of Cincinnati, was a representative concern of Cincinnati. On the contrary, I suppose it is some secret, infamous concern there that represents nothing except the villainy which is exposed in the papers it sends out. I do not understand it to be representative of the people of Cincinnati.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not understand the Senator so to charge, and perhaps I need not have said anything at all. I never heard of the concern, and I doubt if there is any such a concern.

Mr. McLAURIN. I have been very unfortunate in my remarks if I have created the impression in the mind of the Senator from Ohio that I intended to charge that the people of Cincinnati or of Ohio or of any other section of the country indorse any such infamy as this. I am sure they do not.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I did not so understand the Senator.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. In pursuance of the notice heretofore given, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill may now be read for the consideration of amendments reported by the committee, and that if objection be made to any amendments so proposed those objected to may be temporarily passed over until the reading of the bill is completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] desires me to yield to him for a few moments, which I do.

ESTATE OF G. B. STIMPSON.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to call up Senate bill 705, a short bill, which has passed the Senate once or twice. It involves a small payment to an estate, a payment due to a widow who is in distress. It will take only a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

Mr. TELLER. If it gives rise to any debate I will withdraw it.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 705) for the relief of the legal representatives of G. B. Stimpson; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of G. B. Stimpson, of Pueblo, Colo., $375, due him for clerk hire and expenses while serving as postmaster at South Pueblo, Colo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the report states that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads propose to amend the bill by striking out "seventy" and inserting "twenty;" and it is stated on the Calendar that the bill was reported with an amendment, but it is not so printed.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose it should be amended as the committee reported it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "five," strike out "seventy" and insert "twenty;" so as to read "$325."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BELLINGHAM BAY LIGHT-HOUSE, WASHINGTON.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3725) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at the entrance to Bellingham Bay, State of Washington.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $30,000 to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at the entrance to Bellingham Bay, State of Washington, together with a suitable building, under the direction of the Light-House Board.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY RESERVATION OF FORT MISSOULA, MONT.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont, and then to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], each to call up a bill, provided the bill shall lead to no discussion.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10761) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept from the citizens of Missoula, Mont., deeds donating to the United States certain lands for the enlargement of the military reservation of Fort Missoula, Mont., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SHERIDAN, WYO.

Mr. WARREN. Thanking the Senator from California, I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 143) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, court, and other Government offices in the city of Sheridan and State of Wyoming, the cost of the site and building, including the vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $160,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPAYMENT OF DUTY ON ANTHRACITE COAL.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MCCOMAS. I ask the Senator to yield but a moment for the passage of a bill of five lines.

Mr. PERKINS. If it occasions no debate I do not object.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The bill is reported from the Committee on Finance. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1379) for repayment of duty on anthracite coal, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out the words "any port of the United States" and insert "the port of Baltimore, Md.;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to repay all moneys paid as duty upon anthracite coal at the port of Baltimore, Md., to the persons who paid the same after the 6th day of October, 1902.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if Baltimore is the only port where these payments were made after the law went into effect?

Mr. MCCOMAS. I understand not; but the Committee on Finance thought they would confine this bill to the particular matter before them at the time.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that if similar payments were made at the port of Boston, for instance, or New York, they should be treated exactly as Baltimore is treated.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I have no doubt they would if they brought the facts before the committee, though of course I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to the bill, but it does seem to me to be extraordinary legislation. I will put that on record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire move to amend so as to include the port of Boston?

Mr. GALLINGER. No, I will not move an amendment. The Committee on Finance reported the bill. If they can square it with their own convictions. I do not know that I ought to sit in judgment on them, but I will say that I think it is an extraordinary bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand the facts to be something like this: The Secretary of the Treasury issued an order at the time when there was so much excitement about the coal strike.

Mr. MCCOMAS. October 6, 1902.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Secretary issued an order in which he seemed to relax the strict vigilance which had been exercised in relation to the question whether coal imported was anthracite or bituminous, and at almost all ports, so far as we understand, certain coal coming from Wales was introduced free of duty.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But at Baltimore the custom-house officers required it to pay duty.

Now, there may be other places in the United States, but the only one which the committee were informed about and in regard to which the Secretary recommended that the duty should be refunded was Baltimore. We thought it proper to go as far as we had facts on which to justify our action. If at some other port hereafter a similar state of affairs should be shown to exist as existed in Baltimore, the committee would recommend a refund of the duties collected on anthracite at that port after the issuance of the order by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CULLOM. That explanation is satisfactory. I shall call for the regular order after this bill is out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Maryland that the title of the bill ought to be amended.

On motion of Mr. MCCOMAS, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for repayment of duty on anthracite coal at the port of Baltimore, Md."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PERKINS. If my colleagues on the committee do not object, I will not, provided the bill leads to no discussion.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me, if we are going to proceed with the appropriation bill at all to-day, the Senator had better insist upon going on with it.

Mr. PERKINS. Objection being made——

Mr. CULLOM. It is now 2 o'clock.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not understand that the Senator from Illinois makes an objection. I have a little bridge bill here which I should like to have passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not object, except I think the Senate ought to proceed with the appropriation bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to state that this is a courtesy which Senators ask to have extended to them, and I do not feel at liberty to personally object, provided the bill called up invites no discussion.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It certainly can not invite any discussion. It is a bridge bill in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

BRIDGE AT FARGO, N. DAK.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9319) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 5, line 5, in section 5, after the word "control," to insert:

And all street-railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto, and all telephone and telegraph companies shall be granted equal rights and privileges in the construction and operation of their lines across the bridge.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in after the word "privileges," in line 7. I move to insert the words "upon reasonable terms."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORVILLE B. MERRILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield, Mr. President; but I trust that Senators will permit us after this to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a bill of but five lines, to correct the record of a soldier. A similar bill has been passed by the Senate before. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3638) to relieve Orville B. Merrill, late captain Company I, Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, of the charge of dishonorable dismissal.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read in the Senate.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue by virtue of this act.

Mr. SCOTT. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Fortifications and other works of defense," on page 1, line 9, to increase the appropriation for construction of gun and mortar batteries from $655,000 to $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 11, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to purchase for the School of Submarine Defense for experimental work one submarine torpedo boat of the type of the "Protector," manufactured by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, not to exceed, in the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of War, $250,000: Provided, That before said submarine torpedo boat is purchased or accepted by the War Department it shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War and shall fulfill all reasonable requirements for coast defense.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that that amendment be temporarily passed over.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to make a point of order on the amendment, and I suppose we might as well settle it now as at any other time. I make the point of order that it has not been estimated for or recommended by the head of any Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that it is general legislation.

Mr. BERRY. And that it is general legislation also. It is subject to both points of order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill suggested that the amendment be passed over. I do not know how soon the bill will be completed. If the bill is going to take long, I should prefer that the matter be passed over, because I am interested in it somewhat.

Mr. BERRY. Let it be passed over, if the Senator desires.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. An investigation is going on by a special committee, which I should like to attend. If I can be sent for when the reading of the bill has been concluded, I should like to be here when this amendment is considered. If the Senator from Arkansas desires to debate it——

Mr. BERRY. It is immaterial to me whether it is done now or at the close of the bill, but I want to have it understood that the point of order is made, and whether I am here or not, I shall desire the Chair to rule on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not quite agree to that course at present. If the Senator in charge of the bill will allow the amendment to be passed over until Monday next and allow it then to be pending, I have no objection. But I am somewhat interested in it. I have been sitting here for a couple of days expecting this bill to come up. I have other engagements. It seems to me the amendment ought not to be passed over to an indefinite period, when some of us might be out of the Chamber or away from the Capitol when it comes up.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are very few Senators here.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are very few Senators here this afternoon. I do not think that if contested the amendment could be adopted anyway to-day; certainly not without a call of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. It would satisfy me entirely to have it go over until Monday and pass on the point of order at that time.

Mr. PERKINS. I am quite willing on behalf of the committee to consent that the consideration of this amendment shall go over until Monday, and that the reading of the bill shall be continued for action on unobjected committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 4, line 12, to increase the appropriation for the purchase, manufacture, test, and issue of ammunition for machine and automatic guns, etc., from $161,600 to $261,600.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 1, after the word "memorial," to strike out "structure" and insert "monument;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to erect a suitable memorial monument on the grounds at Fort Recovery, Ohio, where lie buried the remains of Gen. Richard Butler, 630 American soldiers, and 61 officers, who, while under the command of General St. Clair, were slaughtered by the Indians of the Northwest Territory at the battle of Fort Recovery, Ohio, on the morning of November 4, 1791.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to make the bill read: "A bill for the erection of a memorial monument at Fort Recovery, Ohio."

ABSENTEE WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2268) to authorize the absentee Wyandotte Indians to select certain lands, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That each living adult Absentee Wyandotte Indian whose name appears upon a census roll of Absentee Wyandotte Indians made by Special Agent Joel T. Olive, as approved by the Secretary of the Interior December 7, 1896, may select in person, or by his duly authorized attorney in fact, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, from the public domain, 80 acres of agricultural land wherever there may be such lands subject to entry; and the heirs of any deceased Absentee Wyandotte Indian so enrolled may in like manner select a like quantity of land in the name of their deceased ancestor, and the natural or legal guardian of any minor Absentee Wyandotte so enrolled may in like manner select 80 acres of agricultural land for his ward, and when lands shall have been so selected by any person entitled to make such selection and such selection is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause a patent to issue in the name of the enrolled Absentee Wyandotte by or for whom such selection has been made, which patent shall contain the condition that the lands covered thereby shall not be aliened without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That as soon as any such selection has been made and approved the pro rata share of the Indian by or for whom such selection was made in the funds provided in the acts of August 15, 1894, and March 2, 1895, shall thereby become relinquished to the United States and shall be covered into the Treasury as proceeds of the sales of public lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill, but it seems to carry with it the right of deceased Indians or their heirs or attorneys to locate in their names, which is equivalent to the issuance of scrip in behalf of these Indians.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator is mistaken. If he will examine the bill I think he will find that it gives no such right, as I understand. It is not the intention of the bill to give such right.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the bill had better go over for examination on that ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2467) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Does the bill merely refer the claim to the Court of Claims?

Mr. CLAPP. It is a payment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill makes a direct appropriation.

Mr. KEAN. How much?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two hundred and fifteen thousand and some hundred dollars.

Mr. KEAN. I do not like to object, but I do not think we ought to pass a bill involving $215,000 so quickly without some explanation.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The passage of the bill is recommended by the Court of Claims, the Chair understands, in the finding of that court.

Mr. FORAKER. Let the bill be again read.

The Secretary again read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana $215,820.89 for a claim found due that bank by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCREARY and Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. I have that motion pending, I believe.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope we will have a vote on it.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield to me that I may call up a bill which it will not take two minutes to pass.

Mr. FORAKER. I will withhold my motion for a moment to accommodate the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. KEAN. I shall insist on the motion after the bill the Senator from Kentucky calls up has been disposed of.

ISABEL F. EASUM.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3985) granting an increase of pension to Isabel F. Easum.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the words "widow of," to strike out "Captain;" in the same line, after the word "late," to strike out "of" and insert "second lieutenant and captain;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isabel F. Easum, widow of Charles L. Easum, late second lieutenant and captain Company E, Fifteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. R. GREEN.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to state that I will yield to the Senator from Oregon, but I can not yield after that. I shall insist upon my motion after the Senator from Oregon calls up a bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am much obliged to the Senator from Ohio.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 942) to reimburse S. R. Green, postmaster at Oregon City, Oreg., for moneys lost by burglary.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to repay to S. R. Green, postmaster at Oregon City, Oreg., $206.40, to reimburse him for key-deposit funds lost by burglary on December 17, 1896.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FORAKER. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 14, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

INVITATION—JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION COMPANY.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a letter of invitation and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia presents a letter of invitation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NORFOLK, VA., March 9, 1904.

To the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: To the end that the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Jamestown should be signalized adequately, the Jamestown Exposition Company was organized and chartered. The general assembly of the State of Virginia, understanding the preponderant influence which the first permanent settlement of the English-speaking people in America has had upon our nation's history and upon the spread of republican institutions throughout the world, considered that this opportunity to inculcate patriotism and exhibit progress should not be allowed to pass.

The gentlemen to whom has been instrusted the conduct of the memorial deem it proper that our nation's lawmakers should visit the spot most sacred in our country's history.

They, therefore, have the honor of requesting your presence, and that of the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, on a pilgrimage to be made to Jamestown Island on the 18th day of this month, March, 1904.

O. BROOKS JOHNSTON,
Chairman Entertainment Committee.
[SEAL.] G. T. SHEPPERD,
Secretary Jamestown Exposition Company.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5811) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to bridge the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at certain points where the same forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky or the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Virginia.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, accordingly was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHANNEL THROUGH SABINE LAKE, TEXAS.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3565) directing the Secretary of War to expend $125,000 heretofore appropriated for a deep-water channel through Sabine Lake, Texas.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, accordingly was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MONUMENT TO JOHN BARRY.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill providing for the erection of a monument to the memory of John Barry, and I ask unanimous consent for leave to print some remarks on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that leave to print in the RECORD be granted on the bill indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TRANSFER OF LINN COUNTY, MO., TO THE EASTERN DISTRICT.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8681) to detach the county of Linn, in the State of Missouri, from the western and attach it to the eastern judicial district of said State.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Linn, in the State of Missouri, be detached from the western and attached to the eastern judicial district of the State of Missouri.

SEC. 2. That the United States courts for the western judicial district of Missouri shall retain jurisdiction of all civil and criminal causes, or proceedings of any nature, which originated in said county of Linn, and shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed against the laws of the United States before the passage of this act until final disposition is made thereof.

The following amendment, recommended by the committee, was read:

Strike out all of section 2, and add to section 1, at the end thereof, the following:

"Provided, That the courts of the said western district shall retain and exercise jurisdiction over all causes and proceedings, civil and criminal, arising in or coming from said county and begun and pending at the date of the taking effect of this act, as completely as if this act were not passed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUCKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SCHOOL AND INDEMNITY LANDS IN THE GREAT SIOUX RESERVATION.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 56) to authorize the State of South Dakota to select school and indemnity lands in the ceded portion of the Great Sioux Reservation.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of South Dakota shall have the right to select and enter school, indemnity, or other lands granted to the State by the enabling act providing for the admission of said State into the Union in the ceded portion of the Great Sioux Reservation, and said lands are hereby made subject to such selection and entry.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title by adding thereto "and for other purposes."

Strike out the words "and enter," in the fourth and eighth lines, and strike out the comma after the words "school" and "indemnity," in the fourth line.

After the word "reservation," in line 7, insert the words "in South Dakota."

Add to the bill section 2, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the general laws for the disposal of the public lands of the United States are hereby extended and made applicable to the said ceded portion of the Great Sioux Reservation in the said State."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that there is a class of legislation, a number of bills, that propose to open up the selection in various States and Territories for various eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and I want to know whether it comes within that class. This class of cases, I might say to the gentleman, will enable the assemblage of the irrigable lands, and for that reason I want an explanation of this bill.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, in 1890 some 9,000,000 acres of the Sioux Reservation in South Dakota was opened for settlement. It was provided that the land should be disposed of under the provisions of the homestead law to settlers, they paying for the land a price that the Government paid to the Indians. Upon the expiration of ten years after that time, the Government was to pay for all the land which had not been taken. As a matter of fact, there was not exceeding 500,000 acres of the 9,000,000 taken, and only one-third of it has been taken up to the present time.

In May, 1900, we extended the free-home provision of the homestead law over that tract, and notwithstanding that, not more than one-third or one-half of the land has yet been filed upon. Under the provisions of the bill originally opening this land to settlement it was what was known as "trust land" or "Indian land," and only the homestead laws were applicable thereto. Since the expiration of the ten years, the extension of the free-home law, it became what was known as "public lands." Now, the State of South Dakota has lost a few sections here and there by reason of adverse claims, mineral or otherwise, in the State, and this bill simply permits the State to go into this portion of the lands and select indemnity land, the same as they might select in another part of the State, and extends the general provisions of the land laws over this tract, making it uniform, the same as other public lands in the State of South Dakota.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It does not give the State any enlarged right——

Mr. BURKE. It does not give the State anything that it has not got now except the extension of the laws over this territory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. BURKE said: Mr. Speaker, I understand the objection to House bill 56 has been withdrawn.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] withdraws his objection to the present consideration of House bill 56. The gentleman from South Dakota again asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Does the Chair hear further objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

On motion of Mr. BURKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF SITES FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS OF GARLAND COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1956) to authorize an exchange of sites for public buildings of Garland County, Ark.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling that this bill should come up this morning by unanimous consent. I want to examine into it, and I therefore object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will ask the gentleman from New York if he will not reserve his objection until I can make an explanation?

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to my friend from Arkansas that I am unwilling to have the bill come up until I examine it. I have had some experience with Hot Springs matters, and I want to look into this.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that in lieu thereof the statement of the House managers be read.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, this statement, with the exception of one clause, was read on a former occasion.

Mr. BINGHAM. The statement was not read; but it was printed in the RECORD of the day before yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent that, in lieu of the reading of the conference report, the statement of the House conferees be read. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This statement, as I understand, contains no new matter, except that one clause stricken out in the House has been dropped.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no change except the dropping or omission of two or three words; that is all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So I understand. Therefore, there can be no reasonable objection to adopting the conference report in violation of the rule, without reading, if there be unanimous consent to that effect, unless there be a principle to be maintained in the matter.

The SPEAKER. The report has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; it has been printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to finish my statement I will arrive at what I wish to say. This being an unusual and exceptional case, the whole matter having been printed—there being no new matter in the conference report—the House therefore being fully informed as to what is in the report, I do not wish to object; but I think it due to every Member of the minority—more than that, to every Member of the House—that these conference reports should in general be read; and in consenting now to the request for unanimous consent, I do not wish it understood that I shall necessarily consent to this proceeding in other cases, even in the case of a report from my own committee, where the report has not been printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The reading of the report is waived, and the Clerk will read the statement.

The statement of the House conferees, as printed in the House proceedings of Thursday, February 12, was read.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to state to the House, in addition to the statement submitted by the conferees, that we carried out the instructions of the House in accordance with the point of order as ruled by the Speaker and the motion of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to amendment 34, which I understand to be a Senate amendment, providing for an additional pair clerk for the House of Representatives. I wish to ask the gentleman as to the character of the legislation that takes the initiative in the Senate to furnish additional officers or employees for the House of Representatives. I would further ask why that legislation, if necessary, did not originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state that the action referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] was taken at the request of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House; and while the amendment did not originate in the House, and while it pertains to a part of the government of the House, there is no room for criticism as to the amendment having been put on by the Senate. The gentleman will remember that for many years there was a contention between the two Houses as to what either House might do with reference to their subordinate force—a question which always provoked contention.

I have no doubt that this amendment was adopted upon the suggestion not of myself, but of some member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House; and it was a matter that had been so far overlooked that the amendment might with propriety be put on in the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman sees that we have so much difficulty in presenting matters to the House of Representatives on a conference report that where an additional House employee is authorized or where the salary of such an employee is increased—there being already so many employees, and that matter having been a subject of investigation in this House—the House ought to be treated fairly and the matter presented here as an original proposition.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This matter arose entirely after the bill had left the House and left the Committee on Appropriations of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then the necessity that arises afterwards—where this House has been in constant session for some months, getting along without this pair clerk—is, I think, a necessity that stamps this legislation as not to be commended in the first instance.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 201.

The SPEAKER. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. It is a bill to establish a port of delivery at Salt Lake City, Utah.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 201) to establish a port of delivery at Salt Lake City, Utah.

Be it enacted, etc., That Salt Lake City, in the State of Utah, be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, and that the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to said port.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, whose salary shall be $1,000 per annum, in lieu of all fees and commissions of every kind whatsoever.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire if this is not one of those cases the committee the other day were reporting against and urging we should not have any more of these ports?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I will say to the gentleman that this bill has been reported, unanimously, favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MADDOX. I understand, but——

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia this bill was reported because it was similar to bills which have already become laws for similar places, like Omaha, etc., and it was unanimously reported.

Mr. MADDOX. There were strong complaints on both sides in regard to the matter some time ago.

Mr. PAYNE. I beg pardon.

Mr. MADDOX. There was considerable complaint about establishing these ports on both sides of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I will state to the gentleman the complaint was that some of the ports established a good many years ago had gone into what was formerly called "innocuous desuetude," and they were not collecting enough to pay the expenses of the port.

Mr. MADDOX. Is there any evidence that this will not do the same thing?

Mr. PAYNE. It will not be so in this case, and it is a great convenience for a large city like Salt Lake City, so many hundreds of miles away from any place of import, to have such convenience.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not care to object to this matter, but I simply want to call the attention of the House to it, because when we had this matter under discussion we came pretty near doing something, but for some reason we did not, and——

Mr. PAYNE. I will say that I have spent a good deal of time investigating that subject and trying to get a bill cutting off these ports that ought to be cut off, and I think that is clearly a place where a port should be established.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. HOWELL of Utah, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was adopted; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet on Monday next at 12 m.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2207) to fix the compensation of criers and bailiffs in the United States courts, reported it with an amendment.

PROOF OF CITIZENSHIP IN LAND-ENTRY CASES.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 577) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship, to report it favorably with amendments. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the bill. A similar bill has, I think, once passed the Senate, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It has. I hope the Senator will, as he has reported the bill, have it considered at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill be put on its passage now.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 2, page 3, line 9, after the word "through," to strike out "an," and after the word "inadvertence," in the same line, to insert "death, or disability;" so as to read:

The hearing upon such proceeding may be summarily had, and if it be established to the satisfaction of such court that the said applicant for citizenship had in good faith appeared before such court as is provided in said section 2165 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and taken the oath therein provided and complied with the third subdivision of said section, that said oath to the said applicant and his witnesses was administered in open court by either the judge or the clerk of said court, but that through inadvertence, death, or disability or neglect the judge or clerk of said court, as the case may be, failed to sign the jurat to the record, oath, or affidavit of the applicant or the record, oath, or affidavit of his witnesses, or failed to attach the seal of the court thereto, or failed to sign or attach the seal of the court to the order or judgment admitting such applicant to be a citizen of the United States, the court hearing such proceeding shall order entry of judgment, reciting such facts and the date of the proceedings of the applicant for admission to citizenship, and adjudging that the said applicant was admitted to be a citizen of the United States on the date of the said proceedings therefor, reciting such date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 16, after the words "the court hearing such proceeding shall," to insert a comma and the following:

Upon notice to the United States attorney for the district, and after at least one publication thirty days before the final hearing in some newspaper in the district where the court is held, and such other notice as said court shall deem reasonable in the premises.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. DRYDEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals:

Resolved, That the Isthmian Canal Commission is hereby directed to inquire into and report to the Senate, as speedily as it may be practicable, upon the relative merits of a lock canal, a sea-level canal, and a ship railway across the strip of land acquired by the United States from the Republic of Panama under the treaty signed on the 18th day of November, 1903, stating in particular:

1. The cost of each.
2. The time required for the construction of each.
3. The cost of operation and maintenance of each after completion.

In reporting upon these three plans the Commission is instructed to base its recommendations and estimates upon works of substantially the same relative capacity to meet the requirements of the Government and the demands of commerce.

In the event of a report in favor of a lock canal the Commission will state whether such a canal should be constructed with a view to making it a sea-level canal in the future, and if so, what, if anything, would this add to the cost of such lock canal and how much additional time would be required to so construct it.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the appropriation bill known as the "fortifications bill."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, on Saturday the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] raised the point of order upon the amendment proposed by the committee on page 3, reading as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to purchase for the School of Submarine Defense for experimental work one submarine torpedo boat of the type of the Protector, manufactured by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, not to exceed, in the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of War, $250,000: Provided, That before said submarine torpedo boat is purchased or accepted by the War Department it shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War and shall fulfill all reasonable requirements for coast defense.

The point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas is that this amendment has not been estimated for or recommended by the head of any Department.

Mr. BERRY. And also that it is general legislation.

Mr. PERKINS. And that it is also general legislation.

Mr. President, in my opinion the point of order should not be sustained, for the reason that the amendment is not in conflict with Rule XVI of the Senate. The appropriation is specific and definite that the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, purchase the boat. The question of the price and the advisability or expediency of purchasing the boat is left entirely with him.

For the ten years I have had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Appropriations there has not been a session of Congress when the committee have not taken it upon themselves to consider and recommend various amendments which have been offered from time to time which they believed to be in the interest of the public service, and those amendments have not been questioned by the Senate.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] offered this amendment. It was taken up and considered by your committee. They also heard from the Department relative to the same; and I will say in passing that the Lieutenant-General and Chief of Staff, General Chaffee, recommended to the Secretary of War the purchase of this boat. The Secretary of War transmitted the same to Congress without any recommendations, for the reason, as he stated, that he had not sufficient time to give the subject-matter sufficient consideration. A joint board, consisting of the Admiral of the Navy and two associates and the General of the Army and two associates, have not met to consider a recommendation relative to the proposed purchase on account of the absence from the city of two or three members of that board.

But it seems to me that it is in the line of the duty of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification to consider the question of submarine boats for the defense of our harbors. It is not an innovation upon the rule which has heretofore governed them. Even to-day there are four torpedo boats under construction for the School of Submarine Defense, at a cost of $122,000 each. There are also several other boats under construction for the use of the Engineering Department. Indeed, such an appropriation is involved in the very title of the bill; and in the bill itself we make appropriations whereby submarine mines, torpedoes, and other works of defense shall be provided.

As I have stated, this is specific in its recommendation. I hope the point of order will not be sustained, and that the amendment may be taken up and considered upon its merits.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand him to say that there are now submarine torpedo boats being constructed under the War Department?

Mr. PERKINS. I will read what the Quartermaster-General says on page 12 of his report:

The School of Submarine Defense having requested the construction of a certain type of boat for use in connection with the course of instruction at that school, and also at artillery posts on the seaboard, this office entered into consultation with the torpedo board of the school and prepared plans and specifications for four boats, the construction of which, at a cost of $122,000 each, is now in progress.

Mr. LODGE. On what bill is that appropriation made?

Mr. PERKINS. I think in the army appropriation bill, although I am not sure.

I will state, Mr. President, that during the past six or eight years the Committee on Naval Affairs have recommended an appropriation amounting in the aggregate to one million three hundred and odd thousand dollars for the construction of what is known as the "Holland" torpedo boat. That appropriation was placed in the naval appropriation bill. It came into the Senate. It had the approval of my friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], who did not question the propriety for a moment of Congress making an appropriation for the Holland torpedo boat. It was specifically stated in the bill, and it passed at three different sessions of Congress.

Your committee considered the report that was made by a board of army officers appointed to examine and report upon the boat which we provide for in this amendment. Three eminent officers of the Army, after devoting months, under the orders of the Secretary of War, to examining and experimenting with these boats reported favorably and recommended that Congress should purchase five of the boats instead of one.

Your committee examined the plans and specifications that were presented to them, and after going through it carefully they believed almost unanimously, with the exception of but two members of the committee, that it would be a most valuable auxiliary to the submarine torpedo defenses of our ports and harbors.

Therefore we made this recommendation; but we have left it entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of War. We have placed the responsibility upon the Secretary of War in determining the value of the boat and whether it is expedient or advisable for him to order its construction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from California, in addition to expressing his opinion that the point of order will not lie against this amendment, has discussed the merits of the question, which properly will come after the point of order has been decided. I will not enter into that now, but will say that if the point of order is not sustained we will have a good deal of conversation as to the merits of this proposed amendment.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that while Rule XVI is a rule of the greatest possible elasticity, invoked to accomplish all kinds of things in the Senate, so far as the present amendment is concerned it clearly applies, and the point of order ought to be sustained.

In the first place, here is a proposition to take from the Navy Department, which is dealing with this question and which has dealt with it in the naval appropriation bill, the building of a boat or the purchase of a boat already built for the War Department. No estimate has been made for it. Three army officers did make some kind of an examination, and reported in favor of having some of these boats, but I shall be able to show by the testimony of the inventor and owner of this boat that it is not in a completed condition.

I say no estimate has been made for it, and I think the point of order ought to lie because of that fact.

But, going further than that, Mr. President, I am surprised to hear the Senator from California say that this is not general legislation. I have been here a good many years, and I confess I have found great difficulty in determining exactly what is general legislation and what is special legislation.

The Senator says a specific appropriation is made. That is true. It is an appropriation which will not lapse with the fiscal year that the bill will run. It may be two or three or four or five years before it is expended. It is placing in the hands of the Secretary of War $250,000 to do a thing he may not do in the next year, or in the next three years, for that matter.

And again, Mr. President, the amendment provides that the Secretary of War shall purchase a boat manufactured by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. If that is not general legislation, then I confess I fail to know what general legislation is.

I am willing for the present to rest this matter upon the point of order until it is determined, simply giving notice that if it is determined that the point of order does not lie against this amendment, then I will undertake in a very respectful manner to discuss the merits of this amendment, and shall endeavor to show that, while we are having competitive tests of submarine boats made under the direction of the Navy Department, this amendment proposes not only to take the matter out of the hands of the Navy Department, but to refuse competitive tests; and after having done that, the Government shall, notwithstanding there are several types of submarines, purchase one particular type, and thus advertise to the world that the Lake boat is the best type of submarine, in the judgment of Congress and of the War Department.

Mr. President, I feel fully persuaded that the point of order is well taken, and that this amendment ought to go out of the bill on that ground.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not set myself up as an authority on points of order and the rules of the Senate; but I can find nothing in the rules which renders this amendment obnoxious to them. If this amendment were offered to the bill by some individual Senator on the floor, after the bill had been reported by the committee, the amendment would be in a different position.

Now, as to the estimate, these are the facts: When the annual book or list of estimates was made up and submitted to Congress from the Department, this boat had not been subjected to trial. In January, some time after the regular estimates had been sent to Congress, a trial was made, and a most flattering report shows the result of that trial.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, has he seen the letter Mr. Lake himself wrote in the month of January, concerning the operation of this boat?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think I have seen the letter of Mr. Lake.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read the letter for the Senator's information if this question comes before the Senate for discussion, and the Senator will find that that boat did not fulfill the requirements of the test by any means.

Mr. WARREN. I simply take the report of the officers of the Government duly and regularly appointed for the purpose of examining these boats. That is the best authority I have. The War Department—the General Staff—recommended that there should be five of these boats constructed. The matter then passed up to a higher authority, the Lieutenant-General, who recommended that one of the boats be purchased. So, to all intents and purposes there was an estimate made by the proper authorities for the purchase of this boat.

A regular standing committee of the Senate has treated the subject, and brought this amendment in here with its recommendation. Not only that, but the subcommittee and the full Committee on Appropriations have acted upon the bill, making appropriations for fortifications, etc., and it can not be claimed that the amendment is not germane to this bill.

In the bill we have provided for submarine mines, for the laying and care of them, and for the destroying of them, if necessary. This boat is to be purchased for use in laying, in caring for, and, if necessary, taking up such submarine mines. It is for the use of the Army and for the use of this board which is provided for in this appropriation bill. As the provision comes in here it is as much a proper part of this bill as any other provision in it, in my judgment.

It would be strange, indeed, if the Committee on Appropriations is to be bound down by some rule made only to apply to the offering by an individual Senator of an amendment after a bill has been reported from the Appropriations Committee and is before the Senate. I can not see that the point of order is well taken, Mr. President, and I believe that it is not good rule or good practice to hold that any and every other committee in the Senate is superior in power to the Appropriations Committee in authority to amend an appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that this point of order ought not to be sustained. It seems to me that under the rule and under the practice of this body for a great many years, in the consideration of appropriation bills like this—the fortifications bill or any other—an amendment which has been reported by the committee in charge of the bill never has been, to my knowledge, excluded.

Without going into the merits of the question—take this matter of fortifications or the army appropriation bill—it has been utterly impossible to introduce into the paraphernalia of one of these Departments, particularly the War Department, any invention of an outside civilian except through the action of Congress. Very rarely has the Department ever recommended the adoption of such an outside invention. It has been the old struggle for twenty years since we began these improvements. The result has been time and again that Congress has inserted appropriations for the acquisition of such inventions.

This very bill, embodying this amendment against which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has made the point of order, contains provisions for the purchase of the Emery elevating carriage, for the purchase of powder, and all sorts of things that are not included in the estimates, but are inserted upon the recommendation of the committee.

I think if such a rule were insisted upon by the Senate it would prevent the possibility of the introduction of very useful suggestions and the acquirement of very valuable inventions.

It is true that under this rule—which, however, does not apply to this bill, because this bill is reported from the Committee on Appropriations—a very unfortunate condition of affairs, in my judgment, has grown up in the Senate in consequence of the rule adopted a few years ago for the distribution of the appropriation bills amongst various committees. As it now stands, there is an apparent conflict about amendments being offered to be considered by a committee—the Committee on Military Affairs, for instance—if they have the consideration of an appropriation bill, to consider amendments offered in advance to that bill. But that does not apply in this case; and I think it would be unfortunate if we were to reverse the practice of the Senate, which would prohibit this class of amendments reported by a committee being entertained by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. If my friend from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] will permit it, the Senator lays stress upon the fact that the Committee on Appropriations, a standing committee, may report these amendments. The Senator does not mean to say that a recommendation from that committee would get rid of the provision in Rule XVI relating to general legislation, does he?

Mr. GORMAN. No; but is this general legislation?

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit to the Senator that that, of course, is to be determined by the Chair. I think it is general legislation.

Mr. GORMAN. As to the point made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that this amendment is not in order under Rule XVI, I will call attention to the fact that Rule XVI provides that—

> No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill * * * unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

This amendment has been recommended and reported by the standing committee which has considered this bill, and therefore it is, in my judgment, perfectly in order under that provision of the rule.

Now, as to this particular amendment being general legislation, I understand that ordinarily in the consideration of appropriation bills it has never been held that an amendment which provided an appropriation for a new invention was out of order. The acquisition or purchase of rapid-fire guns came in that way, and the acquisition of disappearing carriages came in the same way—not by an estimate from the head of a Department, but by being brought here as a matter of appropriation for a new invention, for a new gun, for an additional amount of powder, or other paraphernalia. Such provisions have never been held to be general legislation. So I think under both phases of this rule this amendment is clearly in order.

I express no opinion about the merits of this amendment. Whether it is a wise thing for the Engineer Department to engage in purchases of this character of boats is another matter; but under the rule of the Senate I think the amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, my observation in the Senate in regard to the practical working of this rule about general legislation has been that if the presiding officer thinks an amendment is obnoxious to the rule it generally goes out, and if he thinks the amendment ought to go in the bill he submits the question to the Senate. If a majority want it adopted, they put it in the bill, notwithstanding the rule.

That this amendment is obnoxious to the rule I think is very clear. My reasons for making the point of order were simply these: The Committee on Naval Affairs had before reported an appropriation of seven or eight hundred thousand dollars—I forget the exact amount——

Mr. GALLINGER. Eight hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BERRY. As the Senator from New Hampshire says, $875,000, which had been put in the bill making appropriations for the Navy. A provision was placed in that bill that the Secretary of the Navy should give a test to all the different kinds of boats to determine as between them which was the best submarine boat, and this money was appropriated to purchase those that met the requirements of the test.

As to this particular boat, I do not know whether those owning it had an opportunity to compete under the appropriation or not; but at any rate such a provision as I have indicated is in the naval bill. It has always been left to the Navy Department to build boats of this character, and the appropriations, as I understand, have been expended under that Department. Is that correct?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct; and I will say to the Senator that the inventor of this boat appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs last year, when he insisted on a competition, and the committee put in a competitive provision and has continued it in the present bill.

Mr. BERRY. The present bill contains a provision for competition. Now, it is sought to go outside of that and go to the War Department and have them declare for and purchase this boat—a specific boat by name, at a specific price. I think the Senator in charge of this bill, if he will make any statement about it, will say that in his judgment $250,000 is far in excess of what such a boat ought to cost; and yet the committee have put that into this fortifications bill, notwithstanding the former appropriation for this purpose.

I know nothing about this torpedo boat; I know nothing about any competitive boat; but I do know, or I think I know, that this matter ought to be either under the Navy Department or the War Department, and that we ought not, when provision has been made for a competition under the Navy Department, to come in on this appropriation bill, and, without a recommendation from the Secretary of War—for there is no such recommendation here—make an appropriation to pay $250,000 for this one boat, the value of which we know nothing about.

That is why I made the point of order. If the presiding officer thinks the amendment is in order, all right; but I will not vote for the provision for the reasons I have given. I repeat, I know nothing about this boat or any other of the boats which have been in controversy, but I think I know that the matter ought to be dealt with either by the Navy Department or the War Department, and it ought not to be divided between them. When there are parties having competitive boats the Secretary of the Navy ought to determine which is the best type of boat, and we ought not to undertake to determine here, without knowing anything about the boats, that we will buy this specific boat and no other.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I rather regret that in the discussion of the point of order there has been so much said upon the merits of the proposition. I think I could go into a discussion of the merits in a way which would show that this is a very meritorious boat, a very useful boat, and a very necessary boat; but I refrain from discussing the merits of the inventions of competing submarine torpedo boats upon this question of order.

If it be so that the Committee on Appropriations can not insert in a bill, without its being obnoxious to the question of order and the rules of the Senate, a provision for the purchase of material or guns or carriages, or anything that they may deem to be an essential or proper means of fortification and coast defense, it is a very strange proposition, one that I never heard made before.

This amendment was introduced in the regular order, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that the committee could have provided in this bill for a battle ship?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think it could have provided for a battle ship.

Mr. GALLINGER. If not, why, then, for a submarine battle ship?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is entirely different, Mr. President. We have in this very bill adopted a provision which did not have the estimate of a Department or the recommendation of the head of a Department. I think that there is more than one such case in the bill.

I have always supposed that as to matters like this the committee had the right to propose amendments of this kind to a bill. If this amendment had been referred to another committee, and that committee had proposed it, it would certainly have been in order. I suppose that the Appropriations Committee, in matters which are especially committed to its charge, has the same power to bring in an amendment that it would have if it had been referred to some committee that did not have that particular charge.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not if it is general legislation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will come to that very soon. If it be so, Mr. President, that the Committee on Indian Affairs, for instance, can not introduce an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, that subject having been committed to the Indian Committee, unless it is proposed by some other committee, you can see how it cripples the power of the committee. I suppose that in a matter within the immediate jurisdiction of any committee it stands on the same ground—this matter of proposing amendments—as if some standing committee, having charge of the subject, or not having charge of it, had recommended it. So I do not think the amendment is open to the objection made on that ground. If it is not open to objection on that ground, then, of course, the second point, that it is not estimated for, is not good.

It is said that it is not estimated for and is not recommended by the head of a Department. True, it is not estimated for, because the conditions have arisen since the original estimates were sent in.

It may be that, construing this rule with the utmost technicality, the amendment is not recommended by the head of a Department; but I want to show what the recommendation is. A Representative in the other House, Mr. HILL, from the Fourth Congressional district of Connecticut, wrote a letter to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War replied to the letter of Mr. HILL as follows:

> WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 5, 1904.
> MY DEAR SIR: I return you herewith, in accordance with your letter of March 3, H. R. 12446, together with a memorandum of General Chaffee thereon. I transmit these papers without an expression of opinion, for I have no means of forming an independent judgment.
>
> Very truly, yours,
> WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.
> Hon. E. J. HILL, House of Representatives.

That is not addressed to the committee; it is not addressed to the Senate. If we choose to be very technical about these things, we may say there has been no letter addressed to the Senate or to a committee on this subject; but here is a memorandum from General Chaffee, which the Secretary of War transmits:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, March 3, 1904.

Memorandum for the Secretary of War.

I return to you, herewith, the letter addressed to you by Mr. HILL, Member of Congress, bearing on the subject of the Lake submarine torpedo boat.

The report of the board which examined this boat and the report by the third division of the General Staff recommending that five be purchased have been referred by you to the joint army and navy board to determine whether this should be an army or navy equipment for the defense of harbors. Admiral Dewey and Admiral Taylor being absent, there has been no meeting of the joint board; so the question as to which Department this defense should pertain has not been decided.

The recommendation by the General Staff that we purchase five of these boats at this time would not be concurred in by me, as the boat itself has not had the thorough trial that it should be given before five, the number recommended, should be purchased. I think, however, that it has disclosed sufficient merit to justify you in recommending the purchase of one boat. In this aspect of the case General Gillespie coincides.

It is therefore recommended that you give your concurrence to the proposed amendment for the purchase of one boat, in order that the virtues of the boat may be fully tested before the additional expense of a million dollars be incurred.

The report of the general staff on this question being out of our control, I am unable to furnish it.

Respectfully,
ADNA R. CHAFFEE,
Lieutenant-General, Chief of Staff.

That is, to all intents and purposes, such a recommendation as the rule refers to; but whether that be a recommendation or not, it is within the power of the Appropriations Committee to propose such an amendment as this, and it is unimportant as to whether it is a technical recommendation or not.

As to the question of whether this is general legislation, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] expresses considerable surprise that anyone should deny that it is general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Practically that is what it amounts to.

Mr. GALLINGER. No. I expected it would be denied, I said to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Did the Senator not express surprise that it should be claimed that the amendment was not general legislation?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not recall my exact language, but I will say it is a surprise to me—yes. But, of course, that is only my individual judgment. I am prepared for a surprise in this matter, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator seems to have some sensitiveness about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I have not.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I should like to state for his information that the Committee on Naval Affairs have provided for the building of six or seven of the Holland torpedo boats. No amendment was offered for that purpose, but the provision was placed in the bill, and those boats were designated in one act as "the Holland boat" and in another as "the high-power boat."

Mr. WARREN. And not estimated for by the Navy or the Treasury Department?

Mr. PERKINS. Not estimated for by the Treasury Department. In fact, the Navy Department declined to make a recommendation. They were opposed to it. We have a recommendation here. Therefore, I can not understand why my friend from New Hampshire would think that the point of order should lie against this amendment when in the naval appropriation bill we made designation of the boat we desired constructed, and no point of order was made against it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will permit me, I will say, in the first place, we let a great many provisions go into our appropriation bills that we know would be stricken out if points of order should be made against them. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] knows that. There are matters in this present bill, in my opinion, against which points of order would lie; but no such points have been made.

Now, as to the point the Senator from California has made, I will say—and I shall take but a moment—that it is true we have made appropriations for the Holland company, but there were no competitions at that time. The moment Mr. Lake appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs and stated, "I want to go into competition," then the matter was opened to competition.

Mr. TELLER. We should like to know what is being said, but we can not hear it off here. Though the Senator who has just taken his seat spoke, I believe, as distinctly as he could, I should not have been able to understand his position if I had not known his attitude on this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. That surely could not have been my fault, because I am quite in the habit of talking too loud rather than too low.

Mr. TELLER. No; you are not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then it must have been the fault of the Senate itself. There must have been noise in the Chamber.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to say that he was surprised that anybody should suppose that this was not general legislation. I may have misunderstood him, but I so understood him, and I was alluding to it simply for the purpose of saying that I am really surprised that anyone should suppose that it was general legislation. That was all.

It seems to me that this provision is not in any respect general legislation any more than any other amendment or anything in the original bill which might provide for the purchase of supplies or implements or ammunition or guns for the purpose of coast defense would be general legislation. It seems to me very specific legislation. I know that Senators look at things differently, but I can not see for a moment that this is open to the point of order that it is general legislation. If there is to be discussion of the merits of the question I shall be very glad to be then heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order at any time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the question whether or not this amendment is general legislation, except to say that in my judgment it does not come within that provision of the rule. The question is, I think, whether the Senate has jurisdiction of this subject. Have we the power to provide in this bill for the purchase of one of these boats? That seems to me to be all there is of it. If there is any rule to deprive the Senate of that right, that rule ought to be abrogated very suddenly. If this Senate is to determine that under any circumstances it can adopt no legislation which does not come from a committee in the first instance, it seems to me that is an abrogation of the jurisdiction of the Senate. If we, on the other hand, shall insist that we can not do anything except what the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall suggest, that is another thing.

Mr. President, I realize that there should be rules for the government of the Senate, but I insist that there is not any rule to bring this amendment within the objection which has been made.

I want to say another thing. Senators say that this matter belongs to the Naval Committee and that, the Naval Committee not having passed upon it, we have not any jurisdiction of it. I do not believe that we should surrender to any committee of this body the power to say that in a bill of this character we can not, if we see fit, make such a provision without the committee's recommendation.

This is the special business, not of the Navy Department, but of the War Department. The Navy Department has nothing to do with the defense of the coast, except, of course, when war is flagrant they will put the ships out to fight; but the making of preparations for defense is for the War Department, whether it be providing fortifications or cannon to be put on the coast or whether it be for this class of vessels.

The Navy Department wants one kind of a vessel and the War Department wants another. The War Department plants mines; the Navy Department does not plant mines. The War Department may desire to take up mines planted by a hostile force. The Navy Department has nothing to do with that; that work belongs to the War Department. The Holland type of ship may answer the purposes of the Navy Department, but it is practically of little or no value to the War Department for the defense of the coast. You can not pull up a mine with it; you can not plant a mine with it.

The boat here provided for is built on an entirely different plan. We have already expended a million and a quarter dollars, Mr. President, on the Holland type of boat. This is a different type. The Senator says it has not been a success. Neither were those of the Holland type a success when we first put money in them, and they are not now a success for the purposes for which this boat is designed. With this boat you can do what with the Holland boat you can not do.

As to the price, Mr. President, it is said that this boat can be built for less than the amount appropriated. So could the Holland type of boat. We paid twice what those boats could be built for by the Government, and very properly so, in my judgment.

These people say they have already expended $400,000 in learning how to devise and build this type of boat. Mr. President, if we are going to say to the man who invents a machine of any character which the Government desires to use either in time of war or in time of peace that the Government will only pay him what it costs to build it, we shall have no inventions. You must give a profit to the inventor, and it would be a wise thing if the Government of the United States were to say to a man who invents a machine which will be destructive in war and beneficial and useful if employed by us for offensive or defensive warfare: "We will pay you something for your time; we will pay you something for your investment; we will pay you something for your brain work." That is the way you will get these things invented, and that is what we ought to do.

I do not know whether this boat can be built for so much less than it is supposed to cost, but in this case we have left it to the Secretary of War. If I have any objection to this provision of the bill, it is that we have left it to the Secretary of War. I believe it should have been the business of the Senate to provide for the purchase of one of these boats. I do not believe anybody who has looked into this affair at all, which I judge the Senator from New Hampshire can not have done, will deny that it is the most promising boat of the kind ever constructed. However, I do not care to go into that question.

I think the Senate has a right to deal with this question, and if the Senate has not the right, we ought without any delay so to amend the rules that we will have that right.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, a presentation of the merits of these boats was made before the Military Affairs Committee, and had the committee felt that they had the right to put an appropriation in the army appropriation bill for the purchase of one of these boats I am sure I am not exaggerating the situation when I say it would have been unanimous, or almost so. But we felt that it ought to go on the appropriation bill which is now before the Senate.

It was certainly demonstrated to the satisfaction, I think, of the Military Affairs Committee that these boats are superior, for the purpose intended, to any boat that has ever been invented. It is certainly the part of wisdom on the part of the Senate to provide for the purchase or building of one of these Lake boats.

I am satisfied in my own mind, while of course I can not establish it, that the success of the Japanese torpedo-boat expedition against the Russian fleet at Port Arthur was largely due to the fact that Japanese were cooks upon one of the Lake boats. We have learned in conversation that a Japanese was employed as a cook on a Lake boat. He was a splendid cook. He was very inquisitive. He stayed with the Lake people for a year. Then he told them that he could find them another cook; that he had to leave. A second one was found. He stayed a year, and he was very inquisitive, and he manifested great interest in the boat. Then he departed and said he could find them a third cook. I have no doubt that these very cooks are to-day engaged in the expedition against the Russian cruisers and torpedo boats, their employment being based upon the information they received while they were serving as cooks upon the Lake boat.

I do hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to allow this appropriation for one of these boats.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this is a matter which belongs exclusively to the Army. The Army has absolute charge of fortifications, and this is to aid in fixing those fortifications and the mines which the Army puts out. This vessel is for submarine purposes, and if the Committee on Appropriations, having charge of this bill, can not put such an amendment on the bill, then it has no authority to provide for the common defense.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that the admission is made that this amendment would be in order if reported from some other committee—the Committee on Irrigation, the Potomac River Front, or Forest Reservations, or, in fact, any other committee, if you please. And it seems to me we can not consider the Committee on Appropriations to be a lesser committee than the others, and this amendment has surely been reported from that committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. This belongs to the Army. The Senator from New Hampshire holds out the idea that it is a matter which belongs to the Navy entirely. It does not belong to the Navy. The Navy has submarine boats for ocean service. This is intended for harbor defense, and it is absolutely necessary, and I am astounded that the friends of the Holland boat should come here and fight this proposition. We have been liberal with them. We have bought a number of their boats, and in my humble judgment there is no comparison between these two vessels. I think the Lake vessel is far superior to the other vessel, and especially is it superior in regard to harbor defense. With this vessel you can go down to the bottom of any of these places; stay there almost indefinitely. You can take up wires at the bottom. You can put out a diver, if necessary, at the bottom. You can cut the wires that may be laid in the bottom, if a torpedo should be brought in and sunk by the enemy, for instance. The officers are wanted for putting torpedoes in position and regulating them, and then in defense. With one of these vessels in any of our harbors, I say, there is no fleet in this world that could come there and take that harbor. I have no fear of it. Just one of these vessels in any of our harbors would protect it against the strongest fleet in the world. We ought to buy this boat; and not only that, but in my judgment the wiser course for the Government to pursue in this matter would be to acquire the patent outright and have absolute control of it, so that nobody else on earth can have one of these boats.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to determine the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield for a moment? I wish to ask a question of him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Was it not demonstrated that the men and crew in charge of these boats could remain under water almost an indefinite period?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; and that they could cook and eat and sleep there.

Mr. SCOTT. And that is not the case with the Holland boat.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if that was demonstrated in the committee room or on the ocean?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been demonstrated in the harbors.

Mr. GALLINGER. Were any officials of the War Department there——

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or of the Navy Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the report read by the Senator from Iowa in the room of the Committee on Appropriations Saturday, and which was read in the House, from the Army; and there is another report—which I supposed I had here, but I do not find it—from the naval officers, who say the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will discuss that later.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I should like to reply to one observation of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of order is under discussion.

Mr. BERRY. I understand that; but the Senator from Missouri went outside and said he was astonished at the course of the friends of the Holland boat. I want to say to him, if he refers to me, that I never saw a Holland boat; that I never in my life saw any man connected with the Holland Boat Company, and know nothing in regard to that company, and I have no interest in it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not suppose you did have.

Mr. BERRY. But I made the point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know the friends of the Holland boat have been opposing the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know that. The Senator from Missouri knows a great deal about the friends of the competing boat companies, but I do not know anything about them. I do not know who the friends of this boat are. I made the point of order because I do not believe the Navy and the Army should both have jurisdiction of this matter. Eight hundred thousand dollars is appropriated in the naval bill in order to determine as to between competing boats which is the best. I say the Secretary of the Navy and his officers are competent to judge, after a thorough examination and a thorough trial, as to which of these boats should be purchased.

It is sought by this bill to take it away from the Navy Department, because they thought they could not get it there, and to bring it before the War Department, which is absorbing, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, a good deal more jurisdiction of late years than I think it ought to absorb. It is proposed to buy this boat at a fixed price and from an individual, without competition, and to give him $250,000 therefor, when there is no proof whatever here as to the value of it. That is the reason why I made the point of order, and not because of any other boat. I do not think that Congress, with the small amount of proof we are able to get, can determine which is the best submarine boat as well as the Navy Department can, with all of its officers, and where it is open to public competition between the boats, and where the tests can be made. That is the reason why I oppose this amendment—because it is a private bill, for an individual, to give him so much money out of the Treasury for a boat that may prove successful or may not.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator, I suppose, is aware of the fact that the Holland boat people refused, or the army officers said it was not necessary, and the naval officers so said, to go into any competition between the two boats.

Mr. BERRY. No; I do not know any such thing.

Mr. SCOTT. They admitted the superiority of the Lake boat for coast defense.

Mr. BERRY. I will say to the Senator that I do not know it, and if it came from Mr. Lake, the inventor of this boat, who is satisfied that the Japanese, by reason of what they learned on the Lake boat, have been able to defeat the Russian navy, or a good part of it, I should like more proof than his statement.

Mr. SCOTT. It was demonstrated, as I understood it, by a detail of officers from the Navy who investigated this matter, that it was not necessary to take up the question as to the competitive merits of the two boats, especially when it was considered that the Lake boat was intended for harbor or coast defense, in place of being a seagoing boat, which the Holland people claim theirs is intended for.

It certainly has been shown, at least to my satisfaction, that the Lake boat can go on the bottom and grapple wires and mines that may have been laid, and it can cut them. It can stay under water for an indefinite period, and it has been shown that the crew can cook their meals, they can serve dinner, they can go to bed and sleep in this boat under water. They can open a valve, or an apartment, as it is called, and the pressure of air keeps the water from coming in, and then a man can go directly on the bottom of the river, or wherever they are, and take up wires and torpedoes and mines, or they can grapple them or they can cut them. It strikes me from the investigation I have made on this subject that it is the best boat which has ever been offered to this Government for coast defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to give a reason, for the point of order will be raised a great many times within the next three or four weeks.

Formerly the Appropriations Committee had all the appropriation bills, and it was usual and under the rule to refer to a committee having jurisdiction of a subject a proposed amendment to an appropriation bill, and that amendment, if reported favorably, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That made it in order within the rule, providing it was relevant and germane and was not a private claim.

Later on the appropriation bills were distributed, and to illustrate what I mean, the Post-Office Committee received the post-office appropriation bill. Now, the question comes at once whether or not the Post-Office Committee, being a standing committee of the Senate, can itself report an amendment to its own bill, and thus make it in order. The Chair reluctantly came to the conclusion that it could—reluctantly, because it gives very greatly increased power to the committees to whom jurisdiction of appropriation bills has been assigned.

But if the Chair did not so hold, it would entirely nullify the rule which authorizes a committee to report favorably and send to the Committee on Appropriations any proposed amendment, because the proposed amendment to the post-office appropriation bill had to be sent to the Committee on Appropriations before the distribution of the bills. They would have jurisdiction. Then the amendment had to go that committee.

Now, you could not send to the Committee on Commerce a proposed amendment to the post-office appropriation bill, and, as the Chair said, he with reluctance came to the conclusion that that was a ruling which he was obliged to make; and unless it is overruled by the Senate, the Chair will make it during the rest of the session.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I very modestly inquire of the Chair if the Chair is aware of the fact that this bill came from the Committee on Appropriations?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is aware of the fact, and holds that the Committee on Appropriations is one of the standing committees of the Senate and has a right, providing it reports an amendment which is germane and relevant and not a private claim, to report to the Senate an amendment, and it comes within the rule. The Chair is obliged to hold that, if he holds it as to other committees having jurisdiction of appropriation bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, no one bows more readily to any decision the Chair makes than the senior Senator from New Hampshire, and yet it does strike me as an astonishing fact that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is a friend of this amendment, admits that this bill could not provide for a battle ship to float on the top of the water for coast defense, but could provide for a submarine boat to go under the water f r coast defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That raises the question whether it is germane or relevant.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that.

Mr. President, this matter of submarine boats—and what I am going to say to-day will be said in a very desultory manner, because I have had no time to put anything in shape, having been occupied with other imperative duties—has been before the Committee on Naval Affairs for a good while, and I want to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that I did not say that the Committee on Naval Affairs should have entire jurisdiction of this matter, but I did say that they had heretofore had jurisdiction of it.

Prior to last year there was but one type of submarine boat on the market, and it is true that before that time appropriations were made which benefited that company—at least I hope the company made some profit. I know it expended a great deal of money in experiments, just as Mr. Lake or his company is doing. There was no competition prior to last year. Last year Mr. Lake and one other inventor, aside from the Holland people, appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs and said they were making experiments and were spending money on submarine boats, and that they thought they ought to have an even chance with the Holland people.

The result of it was that the committee recognized that fact and amended the bill so that there should be open competition, not only between the different private companies engaged in this work, but the Government itself, so that when the test was made it might be determined which was the best boat, all things considered, and then the Government would pay its money for the boat which made the best showing.

In the naval bill of this year we have continued the same policy, the provision being as follows:

> The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase subsurface or submarine torpedo boats in the aggregate of but not exceeding $850,000: Provided, That prior to said purchase or contract for said boats any American inventor or owner of a subsurface or submarine torpedo boat may give reasonable notice and have his, her, or its subsurface or submarine torpedo boat tested by comparison or competition, or both, with a Government subsurface or submarine torpedo boat or any private competitor, provided there be any such, and thereupon the board appointed for conducting such tests shall report the result of said competition or comparison, together with its recommendations, to the Secretary of the Navy, who may purchase or contract for subsurface or submarine torpedo boats in a manner that will best advance the interests of the United States in torpedo or submarine warfare.

The only amendment the Senate committee made to the House bill was to include the words "torpedo or;" so as to read "as will best advance the interests of the United States in torpedo or submarine warfare."

Under that bill we appropriate $850,000 for these boats, and we have opened it to competition, not only with every inventor in the United States, but with the Government of the United States itself. The Senator from Wyoming stated a little while ago that the Government is building some of these boats. That was news to me, but the Senator from Wyoming is authority for the statement that the Government is constructing some of these boats at the present time. If that be so, why should this company sell a boat to the Government for $250,000 when possibly the Government of the United States itself is building boats of a type as good as the Lake boat? It occurs to me that this matter should be open to absolute competition, including the Government, precisely as we have provided in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. President, before I proceed further with a discussion of the merits of this question, I wish to call attention to two or three observations that were made during the debate on the point of order. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] said that the Lake boat is for coast defense, while the Holland boat is a seagoing boat, and then he said the Lake boat could grapple and cut mines, etc. Now, where are mines to be located? If we locate them in our own harbors, they can very readily be cut, and we would not cut them in time of war, but when peace came. They could readily be cut with appliances connected with diving bells, which are a very cheap invention compared with a $250,000 Lake boat. If the Lake boat is not a seagoing boat, it can not go to foreign ports and cut mines. That is very evident. It can not go into the ports of France, or Germany, or Spain, or Great Britain, or any other foreign country, and cut the mines of the enemy. So unless the Lake torpedo boat is a seagoing boat I do not see what particular advantage it has in the matter of cutting mines.

But, aside from that, no one knows that some other company can not construct a boat better than the Lake boat, so far as this particular thing is concerned. I take it for granted that if the Government is building boats, as the Senator from Wyoming says it is, the Government is providing for that very thing and will include that in the equipment of the boat, and doubtless the Holland people will do the same thing if they are given a chance. So I think the argument that this is a coast-defense boat, while the other submarine boats are intended for some other purpose—to go out a hundred miles, or 500 miles, or 5,000 miles to fight the enemy—is not well taken. The truth is, I take it, that the Holland boat——

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAIRBANKS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Does not the fact that the boat is to be used by the Army make the amendment pertinent to an army appropriation bill, whether the boat is a seagoing boat or not?

Mr. GALLINGER. That question was decided by the Chair, as I think incorrectly, but we bow to it. As I was saying when interrupted by the Senator from Alabama, there is no reason why some other type of boat, for instance the boat the Government itself is building, should not be used for the same purpose. So there is no point in saying this is the only type of boat that can be employed for the purpose of laying and cutting mines.

Mr. President, I understand, and it is an open secret, that Mr. Lake, after he came to the Committee on Naval Affairs and got a provision inserted in the appropriation bill giving him free competition with every other boat, did go to the room of the Committee on Military Affairs and there exhibit his models and his photographs, which I have seen, and the committee thought it was a very desirable boat, and they concluded in their wisdom that we ought to purchase one of them. The other builders of submarine boats were not invited and were not there. I do not know whether the Government was inquired of as to how they were getting along with their submarine boats, which the Senator from Wyoming says they are building, but I do know that this gentleman went there and exhibited his models and photographs, and thereupon the committee, composed of very wise men, decided it was worth buying. They did not go down in the boat; they did not examine the machinery; they did not get any information which is not gotten from the models that we examined in the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the photographs which I have examined within the last three or four days. I think that the demonstration which was made in that committee room ought not to be given a great deal of weight.

In common with other Senators, Mr. President, I very reluctantly oppose the recommendation of any committee, especially that of the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations. Nevertheless there are facts connected with this matter that I think ought to be fully understood before a vote is taken on the amendment. Then if the Senate in its wisdom concludes to purchase this boat I certainly will yield my views without any fault-finding. I do not know the Holland boat people or any other men connected with submarine boats. I have met them in the committee room, as I have met Mr. Lake in the committee room. In this matter I have neither prejudice nor prepossession, all I contend for being that we ought to have fair play in this matter, and that when we have provided for competition we ought to have competition all along the line.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it not true that the "Lake boat," as it is called, has been ready for competitive tests on several different occasions, but that the Holland people have not been ready, and therefore the competitive test has not been made?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I think it is just the opposite. I think I will demonstrate that before I get through.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me right here?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. I will read from the statement of the Secretary of the Navy before the House Committee on Naval Affairs. He said:

> The people were notified that there would be a test, and the time was fixed sometime in the fall, as I remember it. The Holland people were not ready. The time fixed was changed—it was fixed several times. At one time the only competitor, the Lake people, were not ready. The Holland people have declined a test. We are going on with a test of the Lake boat, which is now up at Newport. The board of inspection, I am informed, will conduct that test just as soon as the ice will permit. There have been various and voluminous reports upon the actions of the submarine boat which we already have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, it seems that on one occasion the Holland people were not ready for some reason or other, and on another occasion the Lake people were not ready. But the fact remains that the provision is in the naval appropriation bill requiring those tests, and if the Holland people default and the Lake people make their test, of course that will settle the matter in favor of the Lake people.

Mr. President, there has been some examination of this matter, and I wish to read what the Board of Inspection and Survey say, under date of January 16, 1904:

> BOARD OF INSPECTION AND SURVEY,
> NAVY DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, D. C., January 16, 1904.
>
> SIR: 1. In obedience to the Department's order, the Board of Inspection and Survey assembled at Newport, R. I., on Tuesday the 12th instant, in order to proceed with the trials of the Lake submarine torpedo boat Protector, under the "act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1903.
>
> 2. The Protector was taken from her dock at the torpedo station and an endeavor made to bring her to the measured mile in Narragansett Bay for the purpose of determining her maximum speed in conformity with the "general programme of competitive trials of subsurface and submarine boats," as approved by the Department. Heavy floe ice was, however, encountered which rendered it impossible for the Protector to proceed over the course, and after waiting for several hours and finding no change in the conditions, the vessel was taken back to the torpedo station.
> 3. In view of the conditions noticed in regard to the amount of ice now in Narragansett Bay and the adjacent waters of the open sea, the Board believed that it would not be possible to properly try this vessel for several weeks, as it will require at least that time in order to render the waters where the trial is to be held—both within the bay and at sea in the neighborhood of Block Island—entirely clear of ice. The slender signal mast, which is no part of the regular outfit of the boat, but is an essential feature of her fittings for trial purposes so as to indicate her position when below the surface, would be broken by contact with even a moderate-sized cake of ice when the vessel was running submerged, and it is therefore necessary that no ice should be present at the time the trials are held. The Board therefore adjourned until the weather conditions are such as to permit these trials to be resumed.
> 4. At the Board's meeting on the 12th instant the Lake Torpedo Boat Company presented a letter to the Board, which is hereto appended, marked "A," which, in the Board's opinion, merits the Department's most careful consideration. In this letter the company admit that their boat as presented for trial has serious defects that affect the efficiency of the screws, the arrangement of the rudders, and the construction of the storage batteries by which the boat is propelled when entirely submerged.
>
> 5. Although these defects seriously affect the speed of the vessel, its endurance—both under the electric motors and the gasoline engines—and other important qualities of the vessel, they requested an immediate trial of the Protector, proposing that if the Government would agree to accept their vessel they would then correct these defects and deliver to the Government a much more efficient vessel than that which they then presented for trial.
>
> 6. In the Board's opinion this proposition is entirely in conflict with both the spirit and letter of the act of Congress under which this trial is held, and in order to avoid any misunderstanding and prevent the possibility of undesirable controversies following the trial of any vessel which may be authorized in accordance with the act of Congress referred to above and to preserve strict impartiality to all competitors it is recommended that the Lake Torpedo Boat Company be informed as follows:
>
> "The naval appropriation act approved March 3, 1903, authorizing the Department to contract for or purchase subsurface or submarine torpedo boats, provided that said purchase or contract should be preceded by comparisons or competitions with the boats already in the Government's possession, or those of any private competitor. In order to afford a basis for these comparisons or competitions, and to determine whether the boats presented for trial would, if accepted by the Navy Department, fulfill all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare, the Department prepared a "General programme of competitive trials of subsurface and submarine boats," a copy of which was furnished to all competitors who had expressed a desire to enter these tests. Since the act under which these tests are conducted in accordance with this programme provides for the test of a completed boat, the actual results attained by said boats when tested by the trial board will be considered as final for the purposes provided for in this act.
> "It is desired, therefore, that before you apply for a competitive trial of your boat you will furnish the Department with a formal statement in writing to the following effect, viz: 'That the boat which you submit to the Department for test is at that time finally completed and that you are prepared to accept as final, for the purposes of this act, the results which your boat is capable of developing on trial at the present time.' It is important that this should be clearly understood, as, in view of the competitive character of these trials, the Department can not allow them to be repeated, but will insist that the results of these trials when once held must be considered as final in the matter of determining the relative merits, under the act of Congress aforesaid, of the various competing boats."
> 7. It is recommended that similar communications be sent to the Holland Torpedo Boat Company and any other persons who may have applied for permission to submit subsurface or submarine torpedo boats for tests under the act in question.
>
> Very respectfully,

> The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Now, Mr. President, that was January 16, 1904, which is two months ago; and that is an official communication from the Navy Department, showing that the boat which we now propose to buy was not in a condition for the Department to accept it.

In this connection I wish to read a letter, if I can put my hand on it, and I think I can, from Mr. Lake himself on that point.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The letter of January 11?

Mr. GALLINGER. January 11, I think.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Here it is. [Handing letter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator from Connecticut for handing it to me. I have it among my papers here.

Mr. Lake, under date of January 11, submitted this letter to the Navy Department:

> NEWPORT, R. I., January 11, 1904.
> SIR: It is our desire to anticipate the examination of the Protector by the Board of Inspection and Survey by a brief statement regarding certain of the present features of the boat. We believe we may thus facilitate the Board's work and help to a better understanding of the craft's condition and probable performance.
>
> The speed and endurance of the Protector will fall considerably below our original estimate. This will be due to the present inefficient screws—

Two months ago, remember—> fitted the day before we left Bridgeport—which have been tried out progressively over the official mile course since our arrival here. The results of these trials are given in the following table, which we shall be glad to have verified by the Board and incorporated accordingly in its report. It will be seen that the ratio of slip is out of all reason and that speeds are away below the proper resultants of the power of the engines under their various conditions. New screws have been designed, based upon the findings of these performances, and corrections have been made which promise us a speed of 10 knots under light cruising condition. The installation of these new screws, which must await return to our home waters, where proper mechanical facilities may be secured, will involve the fitting of new shafts and a modification and rearrangement of our rudders, both vertical and horizontal. The change to the vertical rudder will be a material improvement to the navigational power of the boat by bringing that rudder directly in the sweep of the thrust from the propellers.

Apropos of the steering gear of the craft we should also advise the board that the present handwheel to the hydroplane controlling gear is not of sufficient size to give the speediest manipulation that may be desirable in active service, and that, too, it is our intention to improve.

The batteries now in the Protector have been installed for more than a year, and while examination will disclose a very satisfactory condition of the plates after that lapse of time certain mechanical details are subject to improvement. The present supporting lugs, while considerably heavier than those required in shore installations, have been strained by the racking effect of the heavy seas the boat has been exposed to since her commission a year ago. We submit herewith a model cell showing an improved crossbar and connections which we are sure will obviate further trouble.

Should the board after the examination of the boat find her suitable for naval service, and so recommend, we, contingent upon that encouragement, will make all of these improvements at our expense before turning the vessel over to the Government.

Very respectfully,

THE LAKE TORPEDO BOAT CO.,
SIMON LAKE, President.

Capt. C. J. TRAIN,
President Board of Inspection and Survey, United States Navy.
